IN THE POLITICAL FIELD

VIRGINIA CERTAIN TO SEND A GRANT DELEGATION.

THE CONVENTION SPENDS A DAY IN SPEECH-MAKING—RESOLUTIONS STRONGLY ADVOCATING GRANT — BLAINE ASKED TO TAKE THE SECOND PLACE.

STAUNTON, Va., April 22.—The Virginia Republican Convention to send delegates to Chicago, after being in session all day, at midnight was apparently no nearer reaching a result than it was yesterday morning. The whole day was consumed in speech-making. This evening the Committee on Resolutions reported the following:

Resolved, I. That in Ulysses S. Grant we repose absolute trust. His honesty, fidelity to duty, varied experience, patriotism, and his efforts to secure the integrity, prosperity, grandeur, and perpetuity of our common country, by uniting its people and allaying sectional strife, all point to him as pre-eminently the candidate under whose leadership the progressive and law-abiding people may unite and defeat the machinery of Bourbon spirit, which neither learns nor forgets.

II. That the delegates from Virginia to the National Republican Convention are hereby instructed to vote as a unit for Ulysses S. Grant for the nomination for the Presidency, and to use their most earnest and united efforts to secure his nomination.

III. That, whereas, this convention was called specifically for the purpose of appointing national delegates only, and it is deemed inexpedient to make an Electoral ticket at this time, the State Committee to be hereafter appointed is hereby empowered and directed to call a State Convention, to be held at the City of Richmond, on Wednesday, the 28th day of July next, for the purpose of nominating an Electoral ticket.

IV. That the Republicans of Virginia earnestly request the Hon. James G. Blaine to accept the position of candidate for Vice-President, and that they believe that the conjunction of these two honored and distinguished names upon the same ticket would prove invincible; and be it further

Resolved, That we pledge the earnest support of the Republican Party of Virginia to the Chicago nominee.

The following was offered as a minority report and a substitute for the third section of the above:

Resolved, That we believe it will be to the interest of the Republican Party to place before the party a full Republican Electoral ticket at this time.

Five members of the committee signed this report. A second minority report, signed by three members of the committee, is as follows:

Resolved, That this convention proceed to nominate an Electoral ticket, leaving the selection of each Elector to the delegates from that district, and that the State Central Committee be empowered to receive resignations and fill vacancies, and that we will support Electors in favor of the Republican nominee.

In regard to the resolutions indorsing Gen. Grant, there is no dispute. They will certainly be passed. The discussion which is still going on is in regard to a proposition to adjourn the selection of Electors until July. The readjusting or Mahone element is in favor of adjournment. The so-called "straight-out" Republicans demand that the Electors be chosen now. The debate on this question, which as yet has developed no new point, will be continued until morning. H. C.

THE GEORGIA REPUBLICANS.

EXCITED SESSION OF THE STATE CONVENTION—TACTICS OF THE ANTI-GRANT MEN.

ATLANTA, Ga., April 22.—The proceedings in the Republican Convention to-day were marked by continued excitement. The Grant delegates made an effort, at the beginning of the session, to unseat the President, who was declared elected amid great excitement. There was a long discussion on this point. Amos T. Akerman made a severe attack on the anti-Grant men, who had plotted to control the convention by a gagging policy. He alluded to Lieut. Bateman, of the revenue marine service, who has been here spending money freely for Sherman. Several other agents assist him, and representatives from the Treasury Department at Washington are also here engaged in the same business. Mr. Akerman boldly charged that money has been given and promises of patronage have been freely made. In the discussion it was proved that Sherman and Blaine men had secured proxies from dozens of counties which were really for Grant. Twenty white men and negroes from Atlanta are in the convention, and only six are entitled to seats. Bogus certificates are charged. There has been the most systematic packing ever known in Georgia, and Mr. Akerman declared in his speech that three-fourths of the Republicans in Georgia were for Grant, and their choice was about to be prevented by political rings. The most violent opponents of Grant are persons turned out of office or refused favor by the present Administration. The anti-Grant men cut off debate, and so twisted matmatters that the President was retained in the chair.

The remainder of the programme was then carried out. The Chair appointed a committee to choose delegates to Chicago. The selection was carefully made from the anti-Grant ranks, though several districts had expressed preference for Grant. While the committee was out Mr. Bryant, the Blaine leader, offered a resolution declaring the sense of the convention to be that colored men should have half the honors given by the Administration to Georgia men. A leading colored delegate, amid great enthusiasm, offered an amendment that three-fourths of the delegates to Chicago and three-fourths of the emoluments from the Government should be accorded to colored men. This put the white leaders in an embarrassing position. This was adopted, and the colored delegates expressed a determination to have their rights. The committee on the delegation to Chicago reported an entire anti-Grant ticket, but cries against it were raised in all parts of the house. In several instances the pronounced choice of Congressional districts was stricken out and anti-Grant men were inserted. The report could never have passed in such shape, and wild scenes ensued. The committee had not given the requisite number of colored men, anyway, and, therefore, the report was tabled, and the convention adjourned until 9 o'clock to-morrow, when a lively time will be had in amending the report. How the delegation will stand cannot be said, but the Grant men claim a good part of it, in spite of to-day's strategy and trickery. A revision will be had by districts, and 15 colored men out of 22 delegates will be sent. Both sides are caucusing to-night and both are nervous and somewhat undetermined. Some of the white leaders indulged in severe personalities to-day.

At a late hour it became evident that Blaine would have a majority of the delegation. His friends count 16 certain, and concede 2 for Grant. The delegates will go instructed, but their personal preferences will be as indicated. The Grant men hope to secure 6 votes at least to-morrow. A bitter fight will be made on revising of the list as submitted. Little attention will be paid the committee report. Caucusing to-night clearly shows that the colored men are resolved to rule the convention and stick to the policy declared this afternoon.

OHIO DEMOCRATS CONSULTING.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, April 22.—A very large number of prominent Democrats from various parts of the State are in the city to-night, and from them it is learned that the friends of Mr. Jewett are actively at work throughout the State with a view of presenting his claims for the Presidency. The general impression, however, is that the Ohio delegation will be a unit for Senator Thurman on the first ballot, but beyond that the opinion is almost general that there will be a break, unless the Senator should develop unexpected strength. The opinion is freely expressed that should Mr. Tilden go into the convention with a formidable following, there will be a disposition on the part of the Ohio Democracy to rally to his support, as an act of vindication. It is stated that the railroad managers are using their influence to further the cause of Mr. Jewett, and in some places are meeting with much encouragement. One thing is quite evident, and that is, a deal of missionary work will be necessary to insure the Ohio delegation for Mr. Thurman after the first complimentary ballot.

BAY STATE REPUBLICANS.

DELEGATES FOR EDMUNDS AS FIRST CHOICE—THE MAJORITY THEN FOR GRANT.

BOSTON, April 22.—Conventions were held to-day to choose delegates to the Chicago Convention in the Second, Fourth, and Fifth Congressional Districts. In the Second, William C. Lovering, of Taunton, and Francis A. Hobart, of Braintree, were chosen. In the Fourth, Eustace C. Fitz, ex-Mayor of Chelsea, and J. Otis Wetherbee, of Boston, were elected, and in the Fifth, Henry Cabot Lodge, of Nahant and Boston, editor of the International Review, and Daniel Russell, of Melrose. None of these are instructed, but they are chosen as Edmunds men as first choice. A majority, at least, are for Grant as second choice as against Blaine.

In the convention in the Second District an attempt was made to obtain an expression of preferences from candidates before the balloting began, but this was strenuously opposed, and failed. The proceedings were without special incident. In the Fourth District Convention, statements of candidates or their friends as to their Presidential preferences were heard. Mr. Fitz, one of those chosen, was declared to be anti-Grant and anti-Blaine, and Mr. Wetherbee, the other elected, for Edmunds first choice and Grant second choice. Dr. B. F. Campbell, of East Boston, chosen as an alternate, was described as anti-Grant and anti-Blaine, and John J. Smith, the well-known colored caterer of the State-house, the other alternate chosen, declared himself to be a Grant man first, and in the nominee of the convention second. In the Fifth District Convention there was the most contest. The Edmunds men, however, carried the day. In the course of the proceedings a letter was read to one of the delegates from ex-Gov. Smith, of Vermont, the Chairman of the Vermont delegation, stating that he was satisfied that Mr. Edmunds would not withdraw. Resolutions offered, reiterating the Worcester platform and declaring the preference of the convention to be for Edmunds for Presidential candidate, were tabled. Thus far, eight district delegates have been chosen; the remaining 14 will be chosen within a fortnight.

TILDEN MEN ASTONISHED.

MR. JACOBS'S STARTLING ASSERTION IN THE STATE SENATE YESTERDAY.

ALBANY, April 22.—There was a brief political discussion in the Senate to-day, growing out of a peculiar resolution introduced by Senator Jacobs, requiring the Clerk to supply those Senators who sit facing the windows with horn "eye-protectors." Mr. Mills suggested that instead of their needing eye-protectors, they ought to have "eye-openers," whereupon Mr. Woodin gave the joke a political turn by alluding to the Syracuse Convention, and intimating that some of the Democratic Senators had their eyes opened to their great disgust—particularly Senators Stevens and Fowler, who went to the convention with full delegations at their backs, elected by overwhelming majorities, but were left out in the cold.

This brought Mr. Jacobs to his feet, who give the bantering a serious turn by solemnly warning the Republicans not to flatter themselves with the idea that the Democracy was to be divided next Fall; on the contrary, he said, they were going to be united and were going to win, even if they had to take a patriotic Republican for a candidate.

Mr. Woodin continued the joke by inquiring how it happened that the Chairman of the Syracuse Convention went there as an out-and-out Tilden man, and, since he returned, had expressed himself a rabid anti-Tilden man. Mr. Jacobs replied that he was a Tilden man, both before and since the convention—that is to say, he had the highest esteem for Mr. Tilden, but he was not in favor of his renomination to the Presidency. He was not in favor of any man as a candidate for the Presidency on the Democratic ticket who could not be elected. "And, furthermore," said he, "I can inform the gentleman, and the country at large, that a very large majority of the delegates elected at Syracuse to the Cincinnati Convention are against nominating any man who they think cannot be elected."

This declaration, coming from the Chairman of a convention that was supposed to be Tilden's own, and whose leaders have boasted that 60 out of their 70 delegates to Cincinnati were sworn to Tilden, created some surprise. There is manifestly a good deal of deception and treachery going on somewhere in the Tilden camp. It is time Mr. Tilden put the screws once more to those Kings County Democrats whom he saved from State Prison a few years ago on condition that they should ever after be faithful to his political fortunes.

Senator Jacobs, however, has got himself in a hornets' nest by his remarks. The occurrence has been the principal topic of conversation here this evening, and telegrams have poured in from New-York and elsewhere, including Gramercy Park, inquiring what it all means. To prevent any misapprehension as to what he said, Mr. Jacobs has had the Senate stenographer write out his remarks, and they have been sent over the country by the Associated Press. Mr. Jacobs says he does not retract a word of them. It only confirms what was said in the Syracuse dispatch to THE TIMES of Monday last, that there was a great difference between what is commonly called a Tilden Democrat and a man who desires to see Tilden nominated at Cincinnati. It is well known to those who know anything about it that every man of the Kings County delegation to Cincinnati, seven in number, is a pronounced anti-Tilden man so far as his nomination is concerned. But when the Chairman of the Tilden convention undertakes to include "a large majority" of the 70 delegates to Cincinnati in the same category, he cannot wonder at the astonishment of outsiders who do not understand the two-facedness and double-dealing of the New-York Democracy. It will now be in order for the genuine Tilden men, who really believe in their leader, like Faulkner, Apgar, Robinson, and others, to have their say. Perhaps when they have all spoken the public will learn something of the true inwardness of the Tilden convention at Syracuse.

The Argus to-morrow will print the remarks of Senator Jacobs, with this statement: "The most surprised and amused man at the report that he had come out against Mr. Tilden is Senator Jacobs himself. His chaffing of Mr. Woodin has been done into serious politics only by eminently long-eared mongers of mare's nests. Mr. Jacobs thinks his complete approval of the action of the State Convention in making the cause of Mr. Tilden the platform of the party should not need assertion, but if any think otherwise, the Argus is authorized to say that Mr. Jacobs's fencing with Mr. Woodin was purely Pickwickian. He considers his devotion to Mr. Tilden's political rights too well known to be open to any charge of lukewarmness, change, or hostility, drawn from an ironical banter in the Senate."

A SHERMAN LEADER'S CLAIM.

WILMINGTON, N. C., April 23.—The Star publishes an interview with W. P. Canaday, the recognised leader of the Sherman movement in this State, in which Mr. Canaday claims that out of 16 delegations to the Chicago Convention, already chosen, 13 are for Sherman and three for Grant. Four are yet to be chosen.

DEMOCRATIC DELEGATES CHOSEN.

GOLDSBORO, N. C., April 22.—The Democratic Executive Committee of the Second Congressional District met in Wilson to-day. It was deemed advisable not to call a district convention, and the Hon. George Howard, of Tarboro, and Julius A. Bonitz, editor of the Goldsboro Messenger, were elected delegates to the National Convention, with J. E. Woodward, of Wilson, and R. D. Radcliff, of Newborn, as alternates. Henry R. Bryan, of Craven County, was chosen for Elector.

VERMONT AGAINST TILDEN.

THE DEMOCRATS SELECT A DELEGATION FAVORABLE TO HANCOCK.

MONTPELIER, Vt., April 23.—The Democratic State Convention assembled at Trinity Hall to-day. About 400 delegates were present. Hiram Atkins, Chairman of the State Committee, called the convention to order. W. H. H. Bingham, of Stowe, was appointed President; and H. W. Martin, of Bennington, and Will Sullivan, of Montpelier, Secretaries. Mr. Bingham made a few remarks. The temporary organization was made permanent, with a Vice-President from each county. A resolution was presented stating that, as in the election of 1876, "the people were deprived of the results of their victory through a false count of the Electoral votes, whereby a candidate not chosen at the polls was seated in the Presidential chair, * * * we condemn the wrong and infamy of this arbitrary reversal of the popular will as abhorrent to every principle of self-government." The resolution was referred to the Committee on Resolutions. Resolutions were also adopted deploring the existence of sectional strife, and condemning those who foster it as unworthy to hold places of trust in the Government, and favoring the sending of delegates to the Democratic National Convention uninstructed, except to the extent to vote for the best man to harmonize the party and secure victory. At the mention of Mr. Tilden's name there was a show of applause, but Hancock's name brought forth round after round of cheers.

The following are the delegates, nearly all being Hancock men:

Delegates at Large—Lucius Robinson, Newport; L. W. Redington, Rutland; B. B. Smalley, Burlington, and James H. Williams, Bellows Falls. Alternates—John C. Burke, Albany; A. P. Childs, Bennington; A. P. Grinnell, Burlington, and M. A. Goddard, Ludlow.

First District—B. P. White, Calais, and W. C. Haling, Bennington. Alternates—G. P. Evans, Moretown, and G. H. Simmons, Bennington.

Second District—D. C. Pollard, Cavendish, and N. P. Bowman, St. Johnsbury; Alternates—Alexander Cochran, Ryegate, and George L. Spear, Braintree.

Third District—George L. Waterman, Hyde Park, and F. W. McGettrick, St. Albans. Alternates—John W. Currier, Troy, and J. A. Brown, Grand Isle.

BLAINE AND SHERMAN IN OHIO.

THE TREASURY INFLUENCE TOO MUCH FOR THE MAINE SENATOR—SHERMAN'S PECULIAR WAYS.

CINCINNATI, April 22.—The list of counties which the Blaine men claim will send delegates to the State Convention pledged to the support of their favorite is, as far as completed to-day, as follows: Ottawa, 3; Athens, 7; Fulton, 2, and possibly 5; Columbiana, 11; Jefferson, 8; Hardin, 3; Clark, 5; Scioto, 1; Sandusky, 5; Stark, 14; Huron, 8; Washington, 1; Coshocton, 1; Ross, 6; Wood, 8; Carroll, 14; Licking, 8; Williams, 6; Erie, 7; Defiance, 3; Mahoning, 8; Tuscarawas, 3; Holmes, 3; Noble, 5; Trumbull, 12. According to these figures, 158 delegates thus far chosen will be pledged to support Blaine. Gen. Beatty now admits that Sherman's friends will control the State Convention without trouble. He believes that if it had not been for the failure of the Blaine men to control the Columbus district they would have obtained control of the State Convention.

The Hon. George Williams, (colored,) of Cincinnati, left the Legislature at the close of the session for the South, where, it is said, he is now traveling at the expense and under the direction of Secretary Sherman, working out his plan of securing the Southern delegates to the Chicago Convention. Gov. Dennison's response to Representative Williams's telegram yesterday, in which he stated that "Ohio would greet Georgia with a solid Sherman delegation at Chicago," is causing much disgust among the Blaine men here. They allege that the statement is the purest buncombe. Gen. Beatty, on reading the ex-Governor's dispatch, sent the following telegram to the Blaine Club in Washington: "Pay no attention to lying reports from here as to Sherman's strength in Ohio. We already have four Congressional districts and are sure of from three to six more. So far as delegates have been elected to State Convention they are about evenly divided."

Perry County to-day elected a delegation to the State Convention favorable to Sherman. In the Nineteenth (Mr. Garfield's) Congressional District two delegates were elected to Chicago, uninstructed, but favorable to Blaine.

CLEVELAND, April 22.—The Nineteenth Congressional District (Garfield's) held a convention in Warren to-day, and sent two solid straight-out Blaine delegates to Chicago. An effort was made to get at least one Sherman man in, but it was a failure. A motion was made by Sherman man to send Gen. Garfield, who is committed to Sherman, but a letter was read from Garfield asking that his name should not be used under any circumstances. The district is composed of five of the best counties in the State as to intelligence and independence at the ballot-box.

GRANT'S OPPONENTS IN COUNCIL.

THE INDEPENDENT REPUBLICAN GRIEVANCE—SOME DISCORD SHOWN IN THE FACTION.

ALBANY, April 22.—About 50 persons met this morning in Parlor No. 57 of the Delavan House to cultivate opposition to the nomination of Gen. Grant for President. Among the number were Matthew Hale, William Barnes, Judge Countryman, and E. D. Worcester, Jr., of Albany; Charles Watrous, Horace White, R. R. Bowker, W. Whitridge, G. W. Green, Theodore Aub, and Felix Kaufman, of New-York; Clinton L. Tremain, of Lewis; the veteran politician, A. N. Cole, of Allegany County, and the Hon. Titus Sheard, of Herkimer. Most of the gentlemen were members of the Independent Republican organization, the National Reform League turning out to be a mere paper organization, unworthy of serious attention. It was discovered last night that about all there was of it was Mr. A. N. Cole, an old Fenton man, whose plausibility is only equaled by the facility with which he can turn his coat or jump over a ten-barred gate. Finding that he stood for nothing but himself, the Independents decided to have no conference between the League and the Independents, although the members of the League were permitted to come into the Independent conference.

Mr. R. R. Bowker called the little body together at 10 o'clock, and briefly stated the object of the meeting. On Mr. Watrous's motion, Mr. Mathew Hale was made Chairman. The Chairman, in a brief speech, gave his understanding of the object of the meeting. Its distinctive purpose was to maintain the ascendency of the Republican Party, while it were just as determined that the Grant movement should not be successful. These ideas he believed to be incompatible. He supposed that all agreed with the proposition, and they were met to defend the third term movement. Mr. Whitridge, of New-York, and E. T. Chamberlain, of Albany, were made Secretaries. On motion, the Chair named Committees on Organization and Resolutions, the first having Mr. Watrous at the head, and the second being headed by Mr. Horace White. Some time was consumed in selecting these committees, and Mr. Cole seized an opportunity to reveal the existence of the National Reform League. This "organization" has its head-quarters at No. 24 Park-row, New-York, and he said it was not at all understood, as vastly more pains had been taken to keep it out of the newspapers than to get it there. It was formed in 1875, and had been diligent in the campaign of 1876. Its ramifies through all the States, has an Executive Committee of 35, a Chairman in each county, and a myriad of correspondents. Since Jan. 1 about 3,000 letters had been received, from which the League gathered the fact that at least 10 per cent of the Republicans in the State would not vote for Grant for a third term.

Mr. Cole's address did not please the conference as much as might have been expected, and he was cut short by a motion for a recess of 30 minutes. On reassembling, the Committee on Organization reported, favoring the appointment of a State Committee of 60, and named the following 30, who are to fill vacancies:

Albany—Matthew Hale, John Swinburne, Edwin D. Worcester, Jr., Thomas B. Morrow; Kings—R. R. Bowker, W. H. White, Clarence Deming; New-York—Horace White, F. W. Whitridge, George W. Green, Felix Kaufman, Dr. S. S. Guy, Ethan Allen, J. Schoenhof; Suffolk—James T. McKay; Westchester—Dwight S. Herrick, R. H. Waite; Washington—Greenville M. Ingalsbe; Monroe—H. M. McDonald; Herkimer—Charles G. Palmer; Lewis—George W. Fowler; Erie—W. C. Bryant, George W. Fisher, W. F. Kip, Henry W. Sprague; Orange—J. P. G. Smith; Fulton—F. M. Young; Schenectady—H. B. Satterlee.

After a short discussion of the report, it was adopted. The Committee on Resolutions then presented their report, as follows:

The Independent Republicans of the State of New-York, in conference at Albany April 22, 1880, loyal to the principles of the Republican Party as expressed in its last national platform, [and pointing to the flagrant violation of those principles by Gov. Cornell as justifying the 50,000 Republicans who withheld their votes from him last November,] join with their fellow-Republicans in other States in protesting against the continuance of machine government under the spoils system of civil service, which is bringing the party into peril, if not changing the essential character of our free institutions. It is intended by the advocates of the third term that the delegation from this State to the Chicago Convention shall present the name of Gen. Grant to the National Convention as the unanimous choice of the Republicans of New-York. The representative character of that delegation is essentially fraudulent, being vitiated by the organization of the Republican Party in New-York City alone, whose constitution excludes 50,000 Republicans from any participation in the primaries or in the selection of candidates or delegates. It represents less than 10,000 persons, and disfranchises more than one-tenth of the Republican voters of the State. The representative character of the delegation thus vitiated is further impaired by the "unit rule." Neither precedent, reason, nor morals requires obedience to that rule. A delegate who disregards what he believes to be the wishes of his constituents in order to obey it commits in so doing a glaring offense against them and against the principle of popular sovereignty, which is the basis of our institutions. It is a notorious fact that Gen. Grant is not the unanimous choice of the Republicans of this State, nor do we believe he is the choice of even a majority. Many of them are "unalterably opposed to the election of any President to a third term," as the whole party declared itself to be at its convention in 1875. Many believe, with the strength of a religious conviction, that a departure from the national customs and precedents in this behalf would be fraught with dangers to our republican system, establishing machine government and personal government in the place of self-government as the future destiny of our country, and they perceive no emergency which can call for such a departure. On the contrary, they find in Gen. Grant's recent speech at Cairo, Ill., an express contradiction of such pretended emergency. Many of them hold Gen. Grant morally responsible for the frequent scandals which disgraced his former Administrations, and while honoring him for his military services, are unwilling to expose the country to a recurrence of such scandals, which have already cost the party the loss of both houses of Congress, and might easily cause a repetition of that loss, and a still greater one, in the coming election.

We protest against any nomination which shall put the party on the defensive by reason of the personal character of the nominee or his surroundings, (or otherwise) or by imposing the necessity of defending a third term, which would chill the ardor of its members, and thereby expose the country to the dangers of a Democratic triumph. We find in the list of Republican statesmen many names upon whom all could gladly unite, because they represent illustrious services joined to irreproachable fame. We do not demand any particular person as a candidate; but we demand such a one as is here described, and to him we promise our most active and cordial support.

We protest against any change by the State Legislature in the mode of appointing Presidential Electors which would deprive the people of an election where that subject shall be brought in issue. Any other method of determining that momentous question would be an abuse of legislative power for which we should hold the perpetrators responsible at the polls to the end of their political careers.

We most emphatically protest against the present irresponsible caucus system which now controls the choice of delegates to nominating conventions, and insist that primary elections shall be governed and guarded by proper legal enactments.

Resolved, That it is expedient that the Independent Republicans of New-York should be represented at the St. Louis Mass Convention of May 6, and the State Committee appointed by this conference are empowered to appoint such a delegation.

Much discussion was provoked by these resolutions. It became evident that there was a diversity of opinion, and that there was a strong Blaine feeling among the Albany men, which the New-York "scratchers" did not relish. The New-York men were determined to oppose both Blaine and Grant to the bitter end, while a large part of the conference did not appear to be willing to go further than to oppose the nomination of those men. The words included in brackets were stricken out by a vote of 23 to 20 before the resolution could be adopted. Then Mr. Kaufman, of New-York, offered the following:

Resolved, That in the event of the nomination of Gen. U. S. Grant for President by the National Republican Convention, it is the unalterable determination of the Independent Republicans of the State of New-York to withhold their votes from, and to labor by every honorable means in their power to defeat, Gen. Grant and the third term in the forthcoming national election.

This was bitterly opposed by Mr. Sheard. He declared that he could not go so far as that, although he was a warm Blaine man. He was determined to stand by the nomination of the National Convention, as he did not believe the Democrats would give him a better candidate than the Republicans. But if the conference persisted in passing that resolution, he for one would withdraw from all participation in that movement. The resolution was beaten by a vote of 29 to 11. The conference adjourned just before 2 o'clock, when the State Committee named above met and elected Dr. Swinburne, of Albany, as Chairman. An Executive Committee, consisting of Dr. John Swinburne, Horace White, F. W. Whitridge, R. R. Bowker, J. Schoenhof, Dr. S. S. Guy, George W. Green, H. S. Van Dusen, and W. A. White, was appointed.

A TRIBUTE TO GEN. GRANT.

EX-ATTORNEY-GENERAL TAFT'S ESTIMATE OF HIS CHARACTER AND ABILITY.

CINCINNATI, April 22.—Ex-Attorney-General Taft, addressing the Grant Club of this city, paid the following tribute to the ex-President: "I have never known passion to rise higher, or imagination to be more fertile, than in the opposition to Grant. I need not tell you what I think of Gen. Grant, in honor of whom this club is formed. I have had some opportunity to know him, and I tell you plainly that he is, if I have any way of judging, an honest, straightforward man. There is no hypocrisy about him. If he means anything he will say so, and you will find him where you expect to find him if he has given you reason to think so; and if he has made any promise he will keep it. He is as simple and straightforward as any man I ever met and he is a man with a head on his shoulders; a man whose thought is quick and sound. His conclusions on facts which are presented to him are almost infallible. But no man without the facts can judge rightly, and Gen. Grant is liable, as all men are, to be imposed upon. But a sound heart and a sound head are possessed by Gen. Grant."

MORE GRANT LOCAL DELEGATES.

CHARLESTON, S. C., April 22.—The Republicans of Charleston County held their convention to-day, and elected 17 delegates to the State Convention. A resolution was introduced instructing the delegation to support Gen. Grant, but while this was clearly the sentiment of nine-tenths of the members, who vociferously applauded the General's name when it was mentioned, it was against the programme arranged by the "machine" politicians, through whose plausible and ingenious arguments it was defeated by a small majority. It was subsequently ascertained that 19 of the 17 delegates are in favor of instructing the Chicago delegation for Grant, two support Blaine, and three are waiting for something to turn up.

AFFAIRS IN FOREIGN LANDS

LORD HARTINGTON SUMMONED TO WINDSOR CASTLE.

LORD BEACONSFIELD'S RESIGNATION ACCEPTED—NOTHING KNOWN REGARDING THE LIBERAL LEADER'S CONFERENCE WITH THE QUEEN—PROBABLE SELECTION OF MR. GLADSTONE AS PREMIER.

WINDSOR CASTLE, April 22.—The Queen has accepted the resignation of Lord Beaconsfield as Prime Minister, and has sent a special messenger to Lord Hartington, desiring his attendance at the Castle.

LONDON, April 23.—Lord Hartington started for Windsor Castle at 1 o'clock this afternoon. The Evening Standard says: "The Queen's messenger, after delivering dispatches to Lord Hartington this morning, proceeded to the residence of Earl Granville, but it is uncertain whether Earl Granville has also been summoned to Windsor Castle."

Lord Hartington went to Windsor Castle alone, and it is believed in political circles that he will advise the Queen to summon Mr. Gladstone to form a Cabinet.

The Press Association says: "We understand on good authority that Lord Hartington, after consultation with the other Liberal leaders, determined not to undertake to form a Government. Representations have been made to Mr. Gladstone which, it is said, will induce him to form a Government if he receives the expected invitation from the Queen."

Lord Hartington left Windsor in the 4:15 P. M. train, walking from the castle to the railway station in a drenching shower. Nothing is known in London of the result of his interview with the Queen.

A Dublin correspondent says the disagreement between Messrs. Shaw and Parnell as to the prudence of holding a meeting of the Irish members before Parliament assembles is apparently irreconcilable, it being really a question of leadership. The Freeman's Journal now thinks that the projected meeting had better be abandoned. Mr. Shaw will have done his duty, and the responsibility for failure will fall on other shoulders.

DUBLIN, April 22.—Messrs. O'Donoghue, Biggar, Byrne, Commins, Marum, and O'Connor, (Home Rulers,) support Mr. Charles S. Parnell in opposing the holding of a conference by the Home Rule Party on the 27th inst., but Mr. O'Donnell supports the holding of a conference. Messrs. Gill, Barry, and McCoan have requested the withdrawal of their names from the requisition convening a meeting for the 29th inst., as Mr. Parnell was not previously consulted. Mr. Justin McCarthy believes the requisition was premature and not sufficiently representative.

LONDON, April 23.—The Daily News says nothing can be publicly stated until after Lord Hartington has again visited the Queen. The entire Liberal party, however, believes that Mr. Gladstone will be summoned.

The Standard says: "It is understood that a Baronetcy will be conferred upon Sir Edward Watkin for his services in the development of commerce and railway industries in the United Kingdom and colonies."

A scheme has been drawn up, with the approval of the Canadian Government, for the establishment of an army reserve, to consist of 10,000 men drawn from the Dominion Militia, who will be liable to service in the Dominion, England, or abroad in the event of Great Britian being involved in war.

Lord Hartington, after his return from Windsor, had a conference with Lords Granville and Wolverton, and Messrs. Gladstone and Forster.

The Post says: "It is understood Lord Hartington, when at Windsor, frankly told the Queen he would recommend that Mr. Gladstone or Lord Granville be consulted. He was then empowered to see Mr. Gladstone and Lord Granville."

THE RELIEF OF IRISH DISTRESS.

COURTESIES TO THE OFFICERS OF THE CONSTELLATION—WHAT IS TO BE DONE WITH THE CARGO.

LONDON, April 22.—Lord Mayor Gray, of Dublin, has invited the officers of the United States frigate Constellation to a ball at the Mansion House, and the officers have accepted the invitation.

The Mayor of Cork and a deputation of citizens visited the Constellation to-day and invited Capt. Potter and his officers to a civic banquet. The Captain accepted the invitation, and intimated that he and his officers should first fulfill an engagement to banquet with the Committee of the New-York Herald Relief Fund. It has been arranged that the Constellation shall discharge at Cork, from which place her cargo will be conveyed to Galway by the British man-of-war Valorous. The Duke of Edinburgh, Admiral Superintendent of the Naval Reserves, will arrive in Cork to-morrow, (Friday,) in connection with the operations for the relief of Irish distress.

COMPLAINTS MADE TO THE POWERS OF INFRACTIONS OF THE BERLIN TREATY.

ATHENS, April 22.—The Greek Chamber of Deputies has passed the Army Reorganization bill, reducing the force from 17,000 to 12,000 men, and substituting volunteering for conscription.

M. Tricoupis, President of the Council and Minister of Foreign Affairs, has lately addressed two circulars to the signatories of the treaty of Berlin. One of the circulars draws attention to the increase of brigandage in Thessaly. According to reports of Greek Consuls and Consular Agents, there is great danger that the whole country will be overrun. There are 600 brigands about Mount Olympus, and the Districts of Trikhala, Kardidja, Pharsalia, and Cassia are also infested. New murders and abductions are reported daily. People are afraid to leave the towns. Trade is stopped, and the civil and military authorities are powerless. The second circular says: "The Greek Consuls at Janina and Prevesa report that the Governors-General of Epirus and Salonica, acting under instructions from the Porte, have conferred with the Notables of Prevesa, Paramythia, Marzartili, and Philiate to devise means to throw obstacles in the way of the commission, which is to be intrusted by the powers with the delimitation of the new frontier. The resistance of the Albanians is being organized."

A Vienna correspondent remarks that while the Greek Consular reports on affairs in Epirus and Thessaly are not the most trustworthy source of information, still their general tenor as given in these circulars, making due allowance for exaggeration, may be credited as correct.

CURRENT FOREIGN TOPICS.

LONDON, April 22.—Five hundred emigrants, including several Scotch farmers, left Glasgow for America this morning.

During a gale yesterday on the Scottish coast, 19 fishermen were drowned.

Lord Archibald Campbell will sail for Canada on Saturday next, to visit his brother, Lord Lorne, Governor-General of the Dominion.

Sir Charles Gavan Duffy, Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Victoria, Australia, who is on his way to England, and who will be, it is said, invited to contest an Irish constituency as a Home Ruler, has arrived in Paris. The Post says: "We understand that Sir Charles G. Duffy left the colony for a short period, and that he intends publishing a history of Ireland."

The world-renowned short-horn cow, the First-Duchess of Oneida, by the Tenth Duke of Thorndale, belonging to Lord Skelmersdale, is dead. She died of congestion of the liver. She was bought by Lord Skelmersdale in 1878 for $30,600.

A Paris correspondent says: "The Committee of the Comédie Française has unanimously resolved to sue Sara Bernhardt for breach of contract. She is now at her residence at Sainte Adresse, near Havre. She has declared to an interviewer her resolution to devote herself to painting and sculpture, and to play no longer except in fulfilling her English engagement. The correspondent says her vows must not be taken too seriously."

At the inquiry by the Board of Trade into the Tay bridge disaster, Mr. Henry Law, the civil engineer, testified regarding the strength of the material of the piers, and stated that whereas the specifications required a tensile strength of 21 tons to the square inch, some of the tie-bars gave way in testing at a tensile strength of 15 tons to the square inch. He said some of the rivet-holes were too large for the bolts. Several nuts were defective, and in each of the two piers two columns were cracked and had bands around them. The inquiry was then adjourned.

MADRID, April 22.—It is expected that the Chamber of Deputies will to-morrow vote the article on the Cuban budget authorizing the Government to open negotiations with the United States for a treaty of commerce. The Deputies who advocate protection will propose an amendment demanding that any such treaty shall be ratified by both houses of the Cortes.

ROME, April 22.—Signor Giovanni Ferenzona, the newspaper correspondent, whose assassination at Leghorn has been previously announced, was mortally wounded by three dagger-thrusts from behind. He had strength enough to pursue his assailant a short distance. His will, prepared apparently in anticipation of this event, declares that he was assassinated for the House of Savoy, and commends his wife and family to the King. Besides the notorious volumes entitled, "Garibaldi, the Ingrate," and "Garibaldi, the Politician," of which he was the author, a third volume by him, called "An Anecdotal Story of Garibaldi, the Ingrate," was on the eve of publication.

TROUBLES WITH THE INDIANS.

PUNISHING MARAUDING APACHES—THE CHEYENNES AND THEIR CHILDREN.

CHICAGO, April 22.—A special dispatch from Santa Fé, New-Mexico, to the Times says: "After the fight of April 7, in Elbrello Cañon, in the San Andre Mountains, Gen. Hatch, in pursuance of his plan, concentrated his forces, with orders to report to him on April 12, at Mescalero Agency. The movement was successful, and on April 12 Gen. Hatch's corps, reinforced by four companies of the Tenth Cavalry, under command of Gen. Grierson, surrounded the agency, and made prisoners of about 460 warriors of the Mescalero Apaches, together with the old men, women, and children of the tribe. Over 200 mules and horses were captured, which were at once transferred to the Government pack trains. Much stolen stock was also found, which was ordered by Gen. Hatch to be returned to its owners on proper identification. As the Indians were being disarmed, 30 of them made a break for liberty, and in the attempt 14 of the party were killed by the troops. Sixteen of the Apaches escaped. This would not have happened but for the women and children, who were in the way. On April 13, one of the escaped warriors came in and gave himself up, stating that when they were disarmed and dismounted they expected to be hanged. Immediately after this, Gen. Hatch placed the Indians under a strong guard, and sent the rest of his command after the escaped Mescaleros and the bands of Mescaleros and Warm Spring Apaches which were supposed to be in the Sacramento and Guadalcupe Mountains. Gen. Grierson and command moved on the east side of the mountains. Major Morrow's battalion, with which Gen. Hatch has his head-quarters, took the west side of the mountains. Capt. Carroll's battalion, now commanded by Lieut. Susack, and Capt. Hooker's battalion moved over the mountain trails due south. After a march of 35 miles in 36 hours, with little or no water, Major Morrow's command, on April 17, struck a small party of hostiles in Dog Cañon, between the Sacramento and Guadalcupe Mountains, routing them, with a loss of three left dead, and capturing 30 head of stock.

Of the soldiers wounded in the fight of April 7, four have died up to this time, and there are doubts of the recovery of Capt. Carroll.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—The following telegram was received at the War Department to-day:

CHICAGO, April 21.

Gen. E. D. Townsend, Washington.

The following dispatch from Gen. Pope is forwarded for the information of the General of the Army. I respectfully join with Gen. Pope in asking for the suspension of the order for some time. We are now reaching the period of the year when Indians are the most easily stirred up.

P. H. SHERIDAN, Lieutenant-General.

FORT LEAVENWORTH, April 21.

The following has just been received:

RENO, Indian Territory, April 20.

Assistant Adjutant-General, Department of the Missouri, Fort Leavenworth, Kan.:

Agent Miles received instructions from the Interior Department this morning to take from Little Chief's band of Cheyennes a number of children and put them to school. Clark informs me that Little Chief was promised, while in Washington, that he would not be compelled to pursue this course with the children

tures were still buried in the ruins of the fallen roof. The pictures which had been rescued were in charge of the Art Committee, and those not entirely ruined were arranged standing against the north gallery of the building. On the floor in the centre of the old ellipse, lay all that remained of Lamenais's "The Wreckers," owned by George A. Leavitt, and valued at $6,000. It had been torn lengthwise, entirely through the centre, a large piece of the left-hand corner was missing, and what remained was punched with holes, and so bent and scarred as to be almost beyond recognition as a work of art. This painting suffered more than any other in the collection of 130 pieces. But 12 of them, so far recovered, are so badly injured as to be considered almost ruined. 8 are damaged to such an extent that much labor will be required to restore them, and the remainder are either perfect or but slightly damaged. The paintings classed as ruined by the committee, with the artists and their owners, are as follows:

I. AN UNNAMED PICTURE, by Vernet, marked No. 80 in the catalogue, valued at $800.
II. SUNNY BANKS OF THE AUSABLE, by H. W. Robbins, $1,000.
III. NEW-JERUSALEM, by George Inness, owned by Clark Bell, $6,000.
IV. ASCENT RUISH, by Frank Waller, $800.
V. MOMENTS DREAM, by George Baker, owned by Edward Sturges, $800.
VI. BY-GONE, by S. R. Macknight, $125.
VII. IN THE FOREST, by John L. Pilch, $900.
VIII. AT WALTON, N. J., by Joseph Lyman, Jr., $100.
IX. THE WRECKERS, by Lamenais, owned by George A. Leavitt, $6,000.
X. BALTIMORE, 1862, by S. R. Gifford, $1,000.
XI. BIVOUAC OF THE SEVENTH REGIMENT, at Arlington Heights, 1861, by S. R. Gifford, $1,000.
XII. SCOTT ISLAND LIGHT, by William F. De Haas, $1,500.

The actual damage to the above cannot be estimated. It is possible that some of them may be partially restored by artistic treatment. The following five the committee feel can be restored:

I. THE ISLAND OF SALAMIS, from tomb of Themistocles, by L. De Forest, valued at $500.
II. SHEPHERD ON THE BORDER OF LAKE GENEVA, by James W. Embury.
III. FONDAMENTA NUOVE, Venice, by H. A. Ferguson.
IV. GRANDMOTHER'S BLESSING, by R. Epp, owned by J. M. Fiske.
V. GATHERING SEA-WEED, by John C. Wiggins, owned by R. M. Olyphant.

Following is the list of those still in the ruins, and which, in all probability, are utterly destroyed:

I. EIN GRUSS, by G. MAX, owned by F. R. Halsey.
II. SUNSET IN PASSAIC COUNTY, N. J., by David Johnson, owned by C. T. Harbeck.
III. AN UNNAMED PAINTING, marked No. 68 in catalogue.
IV. IRIS VERSICOLOR, by Miss May Warner, L. T. Warner.
V. AN ARBORES, by Simonetti, F. R. Halsey.
VI. A VIDUITE, by Sanguinetti.
VII. MOONS AT PESSOLA, by R. Vedder, Laura C. Ballard.
VIII. PORTRAIT OF EMILY BLISS GOULD, by G. P. A. Healy, estate of late Dr. Gould.
IX. THE KITCHEN GARDEN, by J. Wells Champney.
X. MARKET DAY IN BRITTANY, by Samuel Colman.
XI. ON THE COAST OF BRITTANY, by U. Boutin, Knoedler & Co.
XII. LAYING DOWN THE LAW, by T. W. Wood.
XIII. AN ARAB CAFE IN ALGIERS, by William Sartain.
XIV. FRUIT, by John Lane.
XV. SUNSET ON LONG ISLAND SOUND, by M. F. H. De Haas.
XVI. A RHODE ISLAND BARN-YARD, by William Whittredge.
XVII. CROSSING THE DESERT, by R. Swain Gifford, N. Savory.
XVIII. WINTER IN THE COUNTRY, by James C. Thorn.
XIX. A NEW-ENGLAND HOMESTEAD, by A. F. Bellows.
XX. YUCCA LILIES, by Mrs. J. R. Baker.
XXI. SUNSHINE ON THE WISSOCKIN, by David Johnson.
XXII. L'ENFANT DE MEUX, by La Creche, F. Sturges.
XXIII. MIDSUMMER, by L. M. Miles.
XXIV. THE BIRTHDAY GIFT, by Forest Johnson.
XXV. LAMMERGEYER WITH DOGS, by R. M. Shurtleff, H. D. Cone.
XXVI. THE HUNTER'S STORY, by F. Keller, F. R. Halsey.

The Art Committee had a meeting during the afternoon, but took no steps to unearth these missing pictures. From conversation with members of the committee, the TIMES reporter inferred that nothing will be done in this direction until it is definitely decided whether anybody, and if so, who, is responsible for the damage done. The collection was insured for $150,000 against fire, but this will not cover the damages from this accident. The committee will hold another meeting to-day, when it is possible that some active steps may be determined on to repair the buried pictures.

During the day, Mr. Skit, the agent of Mr. Vanderbilt, notified the Westminster Kennel Club that it would postpone the dog show for two weeks the Garden would be placed at their disposal on the same terms as those which were given it for next week. As soon as the Coroner's jury had examined the premises, Mr. Skit left the building to make preparations for repairs. Capt. Berghold told him that the walls now standing need propping up, and that the mortar need is bad. He said that the building would be made perfectly safe, and the work will begin at once.

Of course, the main subject of conversation in the building during the day was the disaster and its cause. Mr. W. J. Swan, who had charge of the dining-room on Wednesday night, was very incredulous at the report which was circulated that the gentlemen had run away and left the ladies to care for themselves when the accident occurred. He says that when the wall fell it seemed as though a tornado swept through the dance hall. The door was closed by the falling roof, and the gentlemen could not have run away had they wanted to. They were penned in, and were not able to escape until the door was broken in for them. Mr. Swan also complains that Mr. Mackay, when he warned the inmates of the Art Gallery, left them in the dance hall to their fate without a word. Mr. Mackay explains this by saying that the crash came while he was on his way to warn the dancers. There was much indirect discussion among the ladies and gentlemen connected with Fair, on the question as to whether or not Mr. Vanderbilt is liable in damages to them for the breaking up of their enterprise, and one young lady hinted that he could claim no rent for the building, but the majority were cautious about answering questions, and left the reporters to infer many things, which they absolutely refused to either verify or deny.

THE LATE WILLIAM M. TILESTON.

SKETCH OF HIS LIFE—A LEADING SPORTSMAN—FOREBODINGS AS TO THE DOG-SHOW.

William M. Tileston was born in New-Rochelle in 1838, and was consequently in his forty-second year at the time of his death. He received a thorough collegiate education, and soon after obtaining his majority he went to China as the representative of Oliphant & Co. He remained there several years and then returned to California, where he purchased a ranch at Los Angeles. While at the latter place he married. A few years after the war he came to this City, and soon attracted attention by a series of well-written articles on sporting life in China and California, which were published in the Spirit of the Times, the Turf, Field and Farm, and the Forest and Stream. He then became editor of the kennel department of the last-named journal, and continued in that position until June, 1877, when he established the Country. When this paper ceased to exist, in October of the following year, he returned to the Forest and Stream, but resigned in November last to become a member of the firm of Nixon & Tileston, mining brokers, at No. 61 Broadway. His new business was prosperous, and he was in good health and in the best of health, his prospects were exceedingly flattering when death came to blast them. He was over six feet in height, and splendidly proportioned in manner he was a generous, whole-souled, cultured gentleman, considerate to a fault. He was generally beloved by all who knew him, and, owing to the peculiarity and variety of his pursuits, he enjoyed an unusually extended acquaintance in all parts of the country. Superintendent Lincoln was flooded with telegrams yesterday inquiring as to his condition. He compiled several standard works on dogs and contributed numerous articles of a sporting nature to the daily newspapers and to Scribner's Monthly. Mr. Tileston was a born sportsman in the best sense of the term. He was a famous shot, and was regarded as an authority on the subject of dogs. His love for these amounted to a passion, and he always kept a large kennel of fine animals. At the time of his death he owned the champion black-and-tan setter bitch Lorna, the three of her puppies, the English setter bitch Psyche and four of her puppies; the English setter dog Fenge, and the Chamber spaniels Trimbush and Fairy Lou. He has taken numberless prizes. The English setters are by Major Pierley's famous Laverack dog, Frank, out of Rhoda, litter sister to Rev. J. Cumming Macdonald Bangs. They were only recently imported. The Chambers were imported direct from the Duke of Westminster's kennels. The Wyndham, which arrived yesterday, brought from Ireland to Mr. Tileston, a celebrated fox-terrier bitch named Music, in pup to the famous dog Wonder. Music took a prize at the last Dublin show. The Italy, which also arrived yesterday, had on board a Newfoundland puppy, a present to him from Mr. Dalziel, editor of the London Field. Mr. Tileston was one of the founders of the Westminster Kennel Club, and was the originator and principal supporter of its annual bench shows. A short time ago, while conversing with the writer about the coming show, he remarked that he wished it was over. "I don't know why it is," he said, "but I never felt so nervous about anything in my life. I have not actually been able to sleep for several nights, for I feel that this will continue until it is ended." The writer suggested that there seemed no reason for any such feeling—that the previous shows had been great successes, and that the indications were that this would surpass them all. "I know," was the response, "but the responsibility seems to be much greater than I ever felt it before. We have a very large sum of money already invested for printing, postage, rent, &c., and a thousand things might happen between now and the 26th to upset the whole thing. Suppose a fire should break out in the garden, for instance, where would be?" The writer answered that it would be time enough to feel bad about that when it happened. "That's true, too," said Mr. Tileston. "I know it's foolish, but I can't shake the feeling off. In any event, this will be the last time I will manage a bench show." The next day, during the O'Leary walk, a fire was discovered under the seats in the Garden, but was extinguished before any damage was done. Meeting the writer again Mr. Tileston mentioned this circumstance, and remarked that his forebodings had nearly proved true. He did not then realize how correctly he had prophesied; but there seems to be no question that he had a strong presentiment of coming danger. Mr. Walter Webb, who was with him when killed, told the story of the accident to the writer last evening. Together they went to the Garden for the purpose of conferring with the managers of the fair in regard to getting early possession of the building. The interview was eminently satisfactory. Arrangements had been made for taking all the lumber for the stalls into the Garden yesterday morning, and for beginning the work of putting them up at 11 o'clock on Saturday night, and the ornaments and decorations in use at the fair had been purchased at a reasonable price. Having a little business to transact at the Brunswick Hotel, they started out together, telling Mrs. Tileston, who was in the Garden, that they would return in a few minutes. As they reached the sidewalk Mr. Tileston was stopped by a policeman on duty there, who desired a friend to be appointed as special detective during the show. They stood conversing in regard to the man's qualifications for some minutes, and Mr. Tileston having given the required promise, the policeman thanked them and walked away. They then proceeded on their way. Before they had taken more than three or four steps Mr. Webb heard two loud cracks from the doomed building. With a quick intuition of danger he grasped Mr. Tileston's arm and shouted, "Jump, Tileston!" at the same time making a spring toward the street himself. Mr. Tileston, instead of obeying, merely turned and looked up in the direction of the noise. At that moment a stone or log struck Mr. Webb on the leg, breaking it, and hurling him to the ground, and then, as he describes it, the bricks and mortar swept over him like a wave. When he recovered his senses, all he could see of Mr. Tileston was his arm sticking up from a pile of debris. Behind them lay the dead body of a woman who had emerged from the Garden just behind them. Mr. Tileston leaves a widow and four small children—three boys and a girl. His body was taken to the residence of his brother, who is a merchant of this City, No. 146 West Fifty-seventh-street, whence his funeral will take place to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock. Another brother is a Superintendent of the Erie Railway line between Binghamton and Susquehanna.

THE OTHER DEATHS.

The following are the names of the killed:

CONNOLLY, MARY ANN, nurse-maid in the employ of Mrs. Hageman. Her body was identified at the Morgue by her father at an early hour yesterday morning, and was then taken to his home, at No. 737 Tenth-avenue.

HEGEMAN, Mrs. ANNA R., wife of W. A. Ogden Hegeman and sister-in-law of Chauncey M. Depew. She was 38 years old and the mother of two young children. Mrs. Hegeman was of a generous nature, and was prominently connected with many charities in the City. Her father-in-law is Treasurer of the Hahnemann Hospital, and she was one of the managers of the Hahneman Fair, and selected all Table Nos. 1, 2, and 3. The funeral will take place from Grace Church on Sunday morning, and the remains will be interred in the family plot in Greenwood Cemetery.

WILLETTS, Mrs. ANNIE, of Bayside, Long Island. In company with Miss Viola Blodgett, of No. 170 Lexington-avenue, she was escorted to the fair by Mr. L. Lehman. They were walking toward the ticket office at the Madison-avenue entrance when the crash came. Mrs. Willetts turned and ran to the street, but before she could clear the sidewalk she was struck by the falling wall and buried in the débris. Her body was taken to the Morgue, where it remained until yesterday afternoon, when, at the request of Mr. Effingham Lawrence, a Flushing undertaker was allowed to remove it to Bayside. Mrs. Willetts was 30 years old, and was the widow of the late Samuel Willetts, grandson of the millionaire of that name. Her father was ex-Mayor Andrew H. Mickle. Her funeral will take place to-morrow afternoon from Mr. Lawrence's residence, at Bayside.

THE INJURED.

The following were among the injured:

BLODGETT, Miss VIOLA, of No. 170 Lexington-avenue. She accompanied Mrs. Willetts to the fair, and was knocked down by the falling bricks and timbers. She suffered internal injuries, but is out of danger. She was taken home.

COX, S. C. Slightly bruised.

DATES, LEANDER, of No. 14 West Forty-sixth-street. Contusions on the head and body.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?

WORK DONE IN A DRIVING HURRY—WERE THE WALLS SOUND?

The question which naturally suggested itself to every one who saw or heard of the accident was as to the responsibility. "Who is responsible?" was asked by all; and there was an almost unanimous concurrence of the opinion on the night of the disaster that the Building Department was to blame in allowing a building to go up which fell within a few weeks of its erection. But at the department yesterday, and in other quarters, it was asserted that the wall was sound, but that the trusses of the roof had broken, and in their fall forced the wall out. The responsibility for this was laid on the shoulders of Mr. Thomas J. O'Connor, the carpenter. Superintendent Dudley displayed the plans and specifications, with the official report of the inspectors, and referred with much satisfaction to the fact that he had disapproved the first plans and caused what was regarded as safer plans to be adopted. The first specifications were filed on the 24th of last November, and it was intended to raise this portion of the wall and to put a new roof on this section of the building. On the following day Inspector E. C. Maloy reported that the old wall on the Madison-avenue side, 12 inches thick for 15 feet up and thence to the top 8 inches, was settled and cracked, and he recommended that all this portion be taken down and a 12-inch wall be put up. On the 26th, Superintendent Dudley refused approval of the plans, and afterward sent a committee to inspect the place, consisting of Mr. Andrew Owens, Chief of the Bureau of Violations and Applications, and E. C. Maloy and Leander Buck, Inspectors. They recommended that all the cracked portion of the wall be taken down, and also that all 8-inch walls, where the alterations were to be made, be taken down and replaced with walls 12 inches thick. These recommendations were agreed to by the Harlem Railroad people, and the work was done in accordance with them. It was inspected in its daily progress by Inspector Bernard Reagan, who is now in the department, having been discharged by Mr. Dudley, for what cause that gentleman could not remember. The architect was Mr. F. S. Curtis, the Engineer of the Harlem Railroad. According to the papers on file, the work was begun on Dec. 4, and completed the 26th of February last. (The carpenter, Mr. O'Connor, it will be seen, says that this special portion of the work was done in six weeks.) Mr. Dudley presented the following as the report of the Committee of Inspection he had sent to the scene of the accident yesterday morning:

NEW-YORK, April 22, 1880.

Henry J. Dudley, Esq., Superintendent:

In compliance with your order of this date, we have made an examination of the premises known as Madison-Avenue Garden, and find that the front wall on Madison-avenue, above the second-story floor beams, commencing about eight feet from the northwest corner of the building, and continuing about 100 feet, has fallen. The wall was 12 inches thick and composed of good material, and built in the best manner. But four months ago this front wall above the second-story floor beams was taken down, reducing it eight inches, by order of this department, and the 12-inch wall substituted in place thereof. It is our opinion that the cause of the wall falling was that one of the trusses supporting the roof broke in the centre, and on its fall pushed out the wall.

FREDERICK DIAPER, Deputy Superintendent.
ANDREW OWENS, Chief of Bureau.
LEANDER BUCK, Inspector.
E. C. MALOY, Inspector.

Superintendent Dudley agreed with his officers that the falling of the wall was due to the breaking of the A roof in the centre, and while one-half sunk down and still rested against the inner wall, the other thrust the outer wall violently into the street. He insisted that the wall was well built, and said that Smith, Frodgers & Co. who built it, were among the best builders in the City. He thought that the dancing had been a chief cause of the accident, as the building was never intended for dancing purposes.

Inspector Owens Mr. Smith, of this firm, who said that he had examined the ruins, and that he said, a public of [illegible] who were with him, and who were all engaged in one branch or another of the building trade, were of the opinion that the roof was the cause of the accident. They found the girders "shaken," that is, the wooden beams which formed the rafters and girders of the sloping roof, were all split and weakened by the intense heat from the vast number of gas-jets in the art gallery. This, of course, he said caused the roof to give way. Once a roof of that "A" formation began to fall in, no ordinary walls ever built could resist the force thus exerted to drive them outward. If the wall were five feet thick it would have to go. Portions of those walls are now lying on the street in large unbroken masses, after falling 40 feet, and that, Mr. Smith thought, ought to be sufficient to demonstrate the character of the mason-work. "We want," he said, "to have the whole matter investigated closely by experts, who will prove exactly where the fault lies; for we are confident that our part of the work will be found without a single flaw or defect of any kind."

The gentlemen referred to by Mr. Smith were Mr. F. S. Curtis, the engineer; Mr. Van Arsdale and Mr. Berrian, of the Harlem Railroad. Mr. Curtis said that Mr. Vanderbilt had ordered a thorough investigation to be made, and that there was any defective work, and who had put it in. Mr. Vanderbilt himself, who returned early yesterday morning from Buffalo, was greatly shocked by the news of the accident. He was accessible to all who called at the offices of the company. A gentleman in high authority in the company said the company had not, as rumored, received a notification that the walls were unsafe. Responsible men were employed to construct the building, and the masons were the same firm who were engaged on Mr. Vanderbilt's private house. When an London morning report was received from the managers of the fair that there was a crack in the new wall, a competent mason was sent who reported that the wall was in a safe condition, and that the crack was one which might come in any new wall. "The company," said this gentleman, "will make a thorough investigation and gather all the facts of the case. As to legal responsibilities, that question will be settled hereafter. If the company can establish what it holds to be the fact—that it did all that prudent persons would do for the protection and safety of the public—then it will be vindicated from blame. If it is proved that the company did not take the proper precautions, it will be liable for damages. The company assert that it had no idea that the calamity could occur."

Mr. Alfred Mackay, the Superintendent of the fair, said he had sent for Mr. Van Arsdale, who has charge of renting the Garden for the Harlem Company. He came and examined the cracks in the wall and ceiling, and said that the plaster had crumbled in consequence of the heat, and advised that some paper be pasted over the cracks to prevent the plaster from falling. Mr. Van Arsdale also sent for one of the contractors, who said that the wall could not possibly fall, as he had taken every precaution to secure it. All the injury that had been done could be repaired for $15.

The Building Inspectors and the masons having all declared that the walls were all right, and that the fault lay with the carpenter work of the roof, defects in the timbers having, it was asserted, been found, it became important to see what the carpenter had to say. Mr. Thomas J. O'Connor was found late last evening, he having been away in Brooklyn since early morning. He said that he had not been to examine the ruins, but should go the first thing in the morning. It was such a terrible calamity that he scarcely knew what to think. He had been told that they were laying the blame on his shoulders, but until he had seen for himself he did not know what to say. He would have to bear the blame if his work was in fault; but if not he did not want it all laid upon his shoulders. He did not want to blame anybody, but he wanted to look out for himself. Of course, the Building Department was very willing to shift the responsibility from them; but if that roof was not safe why did they not order a different one? The Inspector was there all the time. The beams were 6 by 8, as the specifications called for. All the work done was exactly what was called for in the contract. If the beams were not strong enough, the department had the power to order others to be put in. They were of the ordinary size for the work. They carried nothing but a light roof. May be that one of them broke, he could not tell. But, as for the whole work, wall and roof, was done in a driving hurry. The wall was scarcely up when he had the trusses on it. The whole job was done between the 1st of December and the 14th of January. They had to be ready to open that day for a ball that was to take place. He remembered that on the Sunday morning at the time of the Women's Walk in the Garden it rained with great violence. The wall was then about ready for the roof, and he had men waiting to go on with the work, intending to finish it as soon as possible. The rain, however, came down with such fury that the men could not work. All this water soaked into the just finished wall, which was entirely exposed. The manager of the walk, Mr. Rose, was in a great state of mind, threatening and actually received with threats for damages, and he had to get tarpaulins and canvas to cover the place and prevent the rain getting into the Garden. Everything was in a rush, building, carpenter-work, and all. For his part, he did not see how those beams could give way and throw out the wall, so early as it was said they had if the wall had been all sound. But on this he could not speak positively until he had seen the ruins. He was certain there should have been no dancing allowed in a building built as that was. It never could stand it. As to the cracking of plaster, green timber subjected to great heat would shrink, and the lath might curl and bend, but he did not think that the beams would shrink enough to hurt anything. Plaster would crack if the lath curled under the heat. Mr. O'Connor said that he had put in good material, and done all that was called for. He did not know yet whether his work was in fault, but whether it was or not this dreadful affair had taught him a lesson. He would never take another contract on short time. To do work as it had been done gave no man time to properly supervise it. It was the first time that anything had happened to any building he had put up, and he was so upset by it that he scarcely knew what to think or say. He was very sorry he had not been called to examine the roof when it was thought to be cracking, for he could have readily discovered if there was anything wrong with it, and what the matter was.

APRIL WEDDINGS.

GILLMORE AND VAN KLEECK.

The altar of the Collegiate Church, corner of Fifth-avenue and Twenty-ninth-street, was decked with ferns and exotics in honor of the marriage of Miss Margaret Van Kleeck, daughter of Mrs. Margaret Budd, No. 164 Fifth-avenue, and Lieut. Quincy O'M. Gillmore, eldest son of Gen. Q. A. Gillmore, of the Engineer Corps, United States Army. The groom is at present an officer of the Eighth Cavalry, and, although still of youthful appearance, has been mentioned in general orders from the War Department for distinguished gallantry in the saddle. He was graduated at the West Point Military Academy in the class of 1873, with a creditable record for scholarship. He accompanied his regiment to Western Texas and New-Mexico, where he has seen some severe service in fighting the Indians, and won a high reputation as a soldier. The bride, Miss Van Kleeck, is a niece of the Hon. A. A. Hardenbergh, formerly a member of Congress from the State of New-Jersey, and now President of the Hudson County National Bank, in Jersey City. She was attired in a magnificent toilet of white satin and silk, en train, of course, and bore in her hand a bridal bouquet. There were four bridesmaids—Miss Stokes, Miss Pryor, Miss Gallaudet, and Miss Attwater—each in a toilet of pure white, and bearing a bouquet. Lieut. Russell acted as best man, and the four ushers, in full uniform, were Lieut. Coffin, of the Fifth Artillery; Lieut. Walker, of the Fifteenth Infantry; Lieut. Harrison, of the Second Artillery, and Lieut. Roessler, of the Engineer Corps. The latter, two by two, preceded the bridal party, down the central aisle. Then came the bridesmaids, two by two, with slow movement, while the organ caused the air to vibrate with music, and, lastly, followed the bride, leaning upon the arm of her escort, as the cortège sauntered down the aisle toward the altar railing, where, book in hand, stood the Rev. Dr. Ormiston and his assistant in the ceremony. Among the invited guests were the Hon. Mr. Hardenbergh, the Rev. Dr. Adams, Mr. Judson Hawley and wife, Mr. D. Duncan Vail, Mr. and Mrs. John Fitch, Mr. Eugene Plympton, Mr. Edward Colgate, and many others. A reception at the residence of the bride's mother followed the ceremony.

Mrs. John Aitken, of No. 31 West Fifty-second-street, gave a large reception last night in honor of the marriage of her daughter. The ceremony was performed at the house by the Rev. Dr. Taylor, of the Broadway Tabernacle. Entertainment was prepared for 700 guests.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

At 1 o'clock yesterday morning the foundry and mill at North Danville, Va., owned by Mrs. A. M. Keen and leased to Pippen & Walker, was fired by an incendiary, and was destroyed. Mrs. Keen's loss is $16,000. The mill was insured in the London Assurance for $1,500; City of Richmond, $1,500; Virginia Fire and Marine, $3,500; North British and Mercantile, $2,000; Liverpool, London and Globe, $2,500. Pippen & Walker's loss on stock and machinery is $28,000. Insurance as follows: In the British-America, Pennsylvania, Western of Toronto, and Fire Association of Philadelphia, each, $2,500; Lycoming, $3,400; Kings County, $1,700.

A special dispatch to the Memphis Evening Ledger from Forest City, Ark., says: A fire broke out in the Planters' Hotel at 3 o'clock this (Thursday) morning, causing a conflagration in which 13 houses were destroyed. The hotel was uncoupled. It is supposed the fire was the work of an incendiary. The loss on the buildings is estimated at $10,000, and the damage to the goods of several firms at about $10,000. The wind was from the south, to which fact may be attributed the escape of the principal business portion of the city. Among the losers by fire are the firms of Williams & Co. and Puzzle, Gwynne & Co.

The engine-house of the New-York and Harlem Railroad at Williamsbridge, a one-story stone and frame structure, was totally destroyed by fire last evening. Loss, $2,000; no insurance. The flames extended to an uncoupled two-story frame residence adjoining, owned by Ann Gaughan, which was damaged to the extent of $500.

Mitchell & Levy, printers and stationers, of No. 30 White-street, lost $3,500 by fire about 10 o'clock last evening, principally in damage to stock. Gaines & Co., paper-box makers, on the third floor, and Herman Stetjan, a restaurant-keeper in the basement, suffered $100 damage each. The origin of the fire is unknown.

The house of Elbert Ludlam, of Oyster Bay, Long Island, caught fire yesterday from burning brush, and was entirely consumed. Loss, $6,000; insurance, $3,000, in the Mutual, of Glen Cove.

ARMS FOR CUBAN INSURGENTS.

THE TROPIC LEAVES PHILADELPHIA ON WEDNESDAY WITH A FULL CARGO OF ARMS, AMMUNITION, &C.

PHILADELPHIA, April 22.—More than the usual excitement and bustle might have been noticed during the early part of this week about Pier No. 7½, on the Delaware, between Arch and Race streets, at which place was moored the clipper steamer Tropic, one of the fleet of fruit vessels owned by Warner & Merritt, wholesale importers of foreign fruits, whose trade is principally between this port and the West Indies. As a climax to the extraordinary activity noticed by the habitues of that neighborhood, the Tropic, which only arrived at her dock on Monday, with little notice was again hurried away to the West Indies on Wednesday afternoon, making her stay in this port at least three days shorter than ever before. The strange and dextrous movements in connection with this steamer were incomprehensible to many, but were well understood by at least eight Cubans whose head-quarters are now in this City and it is now known, beyond the possibility of doubt, that the vessel was loaded with arms, ammunition and explosives intended to aid the Cuban insurgents. In order to attract the attention of the Spaniards from all other seaports, and especially from Philadelphia, a few weeks ago the Cubans of New-York started a bogus movement intended to blind their opponents to the real measures then being carried forward in Philadelphia and in Boston. For this purpose they actually went so far as to attempt to open negotiations with a vessel-owner in New-York City, who, they believed, would quietly inform the Spanish officers of the intended project. Mr. Merritt, of the firm of Warner & Merritt, was first approached by an American gentleman from New-York City last March, and his views asked in relation to the Cuban insurrection. The visitor, who is an acquaintance of Mr. Merritt, on being told that the latter was to some extent a sympathizer with the Cuban cause, without further ceremony explained that he desired to charter one of his steamers to convey certain material to a point near Cuba and intended for the insurgents. It was some time after this, however, before any agreement was entered into. The most remarkable apparatus of destruction secured by the Cubans and sent away in the Tropic was a novel and ingeniously-constructed submarine torpedo-boat, to be used against the Spanish fleet now in Cuban waters. The boat is the product of the brains of the late Prof. McClintock, who lost his life a few months ago while experimenting with a new explosive compound in Boston Harbor. The explosion, however, which was a remarkable and terrific affair, attracted the attention of the Cubans, who soon afterward visited Mr. Holgate, the Professor's partner, and opened negotiations with him for the purchase of the compound. The new submarine vessel of Prof. McClintock was also mentioned, and, after numerous experiments made off Lewes, Del., was bought and prepared for shipment, as well as the compound and torpedo model. The submarine torpedo-boat is a small craft, built entirely of iron. It is 32 feet in length, 7 feet across the beam and 8 feet depth of hold. It is to be operated by four men and it is said by Mr. Holgate that these men can remain under water and work without once coming to the surface for at least 48 hours. The Tropic also carried away a large quantity of dynamite and several electric blasting machines. There were no Cuban recruits or persons connected with the revolutionary project on board of the steamer, except one person, who is thoroughly familiar with the plot and the final disposition to be made of the cargo.

The usual course of Warner & Merritt's fruit fleet to the West Indies is along the Atlantic coast, through the Gulf Stream, and thence through Cooper Island passage, in the Bahamas, around the eastern point of Cuba, bearing about 15 miles from the shore, and thence to the port of San Antonio, in the Island of Jamaica. It will be noticed that this course is a tortuous one, and, with little strategy, owing to the number of small islands comprising the Bahama group, and the usual dead calm of the waters between them, affords abundant opportunity for the discharge or transfer of the cargo before the steamer arrives at her regular destination. The principal point of danger to the Tropic is along the coast of Cuba, between Baracoa on the north and Santiago De Cuba on the south, which includes the eastern extremity of the island, now the seat of hostilities, and the point passed by nearly all fruiters Jamaica-bound. When the Tropic left this port on Wednesday, she was commanded by Capt. Robert W. King, who has had experience in blockade-running. Previous to the contract made by Mr. Merritt with the Cubans the steamer was engaged to carry from here, on her return voyage, a cargo of meat and flour to Jamaica. This contract, on Monday afternoon, was annulled and a forfeit of $1,000 was paid to the agent. It is known that Mr. Merritt could well afford to annul the meat and flour contract, since he received $7,000 for the use of the Tropic, with the promise of $2,000 more if the expedition was entirely successful. Mr. Merritt, when asked about the matter this evening, angrily refused to say anything; it was "nobody's business." The vessel has been under Spanish surveillance, but she left sooner than was expected. The Tropic is a remarkably fleet vessel.

A BREAK IN THE ERIE CANAL.

A TWO-WEEKS' INTERRUPTION TO TRAFFIC PROBABLE—THE RESULTS OF DEMOCRATIC ECONOMY.

SYRACUSE, April 22.—The first effects this season of past Democratic canal management were felt on the Eastern Division of the Erie Canal to-day. A disastrous break occurred near the guard lock at West Utica at 4 o'clock this morning. A Captain of a western-bound boat noticed that the water was falling, and informed Michael Brunner, the lock-tender. The level by this time had been lowered about a foot, and Brunner saw that there would be serious trouble. At this point there is a culvert through which Nail Creek passes under the Erie Canal. The water from the canal rushed down into the culvert in a perfect whirlpool, and, as soon as the culvert was filled, began to back up, completely filling Downer's lumber-yard, which is in a basin in the vicinity. By the time the yard was filled to a depth of three feet the water was rushing down the vertical wall, and the tow-path gave way with a loud crash, and the water rushed out in torrents, completely submerging the houses in the vicinity. Lock-tender Brunner undertook to rouse the residents, who were asleep, and succeeded in waking them in time to escape. One family was compelled to float out of their house in a boat from a second story window. Resident Engineer Richmond visited the break at noon today, and the repairs will be begun at once. It is estimated that from 10 days to two weeks will elapse before navigation can be resumed. The break will be most disastrous to boatmen and shippers. A very large fleet of boats, laden with grain, is on the way to tide-water, and will reach Syracuse to-morrow. The fleet will be compelled to lay over on this level of the canal until the break is repaired. The break was caused by the giving away of the key-stone of the arch of the culvert under the canal. It has been known to the authorities for two years past that the arch of the culvert was weak, but no measures were taken to strengthen it. The accident may be directly charged to the niggardly policy of the Democratic officers who have for the past four years made no permanent improvements or repairs on the canals.

GRANT'S REGARD FOR LINCOLN.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., April 22.—In reply to an invitation to visit this city, the late home of Abraham Lincoln, the following letter was received from Gen. Grant to-day:

GALENA, Ill., April 21, 1880.

The Hon. S. T. Logan, Gov. Cullom, and Others:

GENTLEMEN: Your letter of the 17th of this month, conveying a kind invitation to me to visit the capital of the State, the city from which I started 19 years ago as Colonel of the Twenty-first Regiment, Illinois Volunteers, now veterans, was duly presented to me by the Governor of the State. I take pleasure in accepting your invitation, but cannot just now fix the exact date when I can be there. It will, however, probably be early in next month. As soon as I can determine exactly the date, I will inform some one of the signers of the invitation of it. I appreciate this invitation more coming, as it does, from the citizens of the capital of the State without distinction of party, and recognizing, too, the propriety of revisiting the home of the martyr to whom the nation owes so much, and to whom I was personally so much indebted for constant support through all detraction, though an entire stranger to him except officially, when I came to know President Lincoln intimately, and my appreciation of his great ability, noble and generous nature, and forgiving disposition, increased with acquaintance. With great respect, your obedient servant, U. S. GRANT.

STREET CLEANING.

REPORT OF THE LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE, WITH RECOMMENDATIONS.

ALBANY, April 22.—The report of the Assembly Committee on the Affairs of Cities, Mr. Varnum, Chairman, yesterday submitted to the Legislature their report on street-cleaning in New-York. The document is a long one, and covers the ground carefully. A synopsis of the recommendations is as follows:

Your committee recommend a more liberal policy on the part of the City authorities in relation to the repaving of the streets. The present condition of the paving is a disgrace to the City, and should not be allowed. We recommend that the supervision of street-cleaning remain connected with the Police Department, the practical and virtually absolute management to be vested in a bureau of that department, to be known as the Bureau of Street-cleaning. The chief officer of that bureau should be appointed by the Police Board, and hold his office for a fixed term, say three or five years, but be removable by the Board of Police for cause at any time, with the approval of the Mayor. All policemen on the retired list of the department, where capable of any service, should be assigned to duty in the Street-cleaning Bureau and be put under the executive control of the Inspector, and be by him used as far as practicable as Deputy Inspectors, or in such other capacity as he can make them useful. The Inspector should have the sole and absolute power of appointing all his subordinates, without any interference from the Board of Police or other authorities. The street-sweepers should be able-bodied and capable men, employed at fair wages and employed if possible permanently, and not be, as at present is usually the case, a motley collection of half-clothed, half-fed, old, weak, and inefficient men, who bring it for no other employment seek after this work in spite of the irregular and spasmodic employment and low wages. The present system is unjust to and hard upon the laborers, and it is certainly neither advantageous nor economical for the City.

It would be, as your committee believe, very unwise and not conducive either to economy or efficiency to require that all the work of the bureau should be done by the contract system, but the Inspector should have power to make such special contracts for any purpose as he may deem advantageous, and should have power given to him to make such contracts for a longer period of time than at present—say for three to five years, under proper limitations. But no contract should be valid and binding against the City, department, or bureau, unless it is first submitted to and approved by the Controller, both as to the character and amount, and the sufficiency of the sureties.

Your committee report that they believe the separation of ashes and garbage is feasible, that in their judgment it is the correct principle to adopt, and that ultimately, if not at present, it will prove advantageous to the City. They, therefore, recommend the fair and full trial of this system to the person who may have charge of the street-cleaning work. Without a more cordial co-operation and mutual understanding between the City Police and Health Departments and Police Justices, than heretofore, it may be impossible, but some plan must be devised to compel that fair and concerted action which should exist, and which petty jealousies and spites and political differences have obstructed in the past.

The streets should be thoroughly cleaned and purified at least once in each week. This should all be done upon some regular, systematic, and careful plan. There should be such a division of labor, such a fixing of responsibility, that it will be certain that each street will receive, without fail, its share of cleaning at regular times, and that the work cannot be slurred over. The scheme which commends itself most to your committee as calculated to best accomplish the desired ends, is what is known as the "block" system, which is especially favored by Mr. Chandler, who, it is said, received the commendation and approval of others familiar with the subject in its practical aspects. This system has been tried before by the department, but on a limited scale and without a complete and careful organization. It was found to work well even under all the disadvantages, and your committee are confident that it will, if fully perfected, be better calculated than any other plan suggested to insure a faithful performance of the work.

Each precinct should be divided into ash and garbage route. There should be separate wagons for each, and the ashes or garbage should be collected separately. After the ashes are collected and taken to the dump, the carts might be employed for the rest of the day in assisting in

RESULTS OF THE WORK OF INVESTIGATORS.

LIMITING THE MEMBERSHIP OF THE NATIONAL ACADEMY—ABOUT SEA URCHINS AND KING CRABS—BRAINS OF EXTINCT ANIMALS—USE OF THE TELESCOPE TO AID IN INVESTIGATING SOLAR ECLIPSES.

WASHINGTON, April 21.—The second day's session of the annual meeting of the National Academy of Science was much more fully attended than that of yesterday. Thirty-seven members in all were present, those additional being H. A. Abbott, C. F. Chandler, J. P. Cooke, J. C. Dalton, Arnold Guyot, A. M. Mayer, L. H. Morgan, John Rodgers, J. H. Trumbell, and S. J. Woodward. At the private session, an amendment to the Constitution was adopted, which will cause deep feelings of regret in the minds of the many aspirants for admission to this august body. The amendment in question, which gave rise to a prolonged and spirited debate, practically limits the number of members in the future to 100, and as the election of members which followed resulted in filling the roll to this prescribed number, no further elections can take place until after the death or resignation of some of the existing members. The policy of this proceeding will probably never be made apparent to non-members of the Academy, but, of course, there must be some good reason for it. As the roll already includes 95 names, thus allowing of the admission of only two additional ones, much discussion ensued on the merits of the several candidates. The list of nominees proposed for election was a long one, and contained the names of many well-known scientists. The new members elected are Major J. W. Powell, best known for his geological researches in the Western Territories, and Prof. William H. Brewer, of Yale College. The term of office of Prof. F. A. P. Barnard, of New-York, as Foreign Secretary having expired at this meeting, Prof. Alexander Agassiz, of Cambridge, was elected in his place.

SOMETHING ABOUT SEA URCHINS.

The first communication was by Prof. Alexander Agassiz, on "The Sea Urchins of the Challenger Expedition." Prof. Agassiz stated that many new species had been obtained by the Challenger and by the Coast Survey Dredging Expeditions. These new species belonged to a fauna not known along our shores, but limited to the slope of the continental plateau, at depths ranging from 100 to 3,000 fathoms, and called by him the Continental and Oceanic Districts. From these districts the Challenger had collected 49 new species, and the Coast Survey and other expeditions about 35. These were all in addition to the 200 species known in 1874, when only two new shore species were found by the Challenger. The most interesting of recent discoveries in the sea urchin line are of two new families of this group, which represent more or less ancient fossil types, if they are not actually such themselves. Prof. Agassiz described one form in which the plates, instead of being joined together firmly side by side, were overlapping at the edges, thus allowing them to collapse when deprived of water. Many of the related fossil forms of this type were known to be compressed forms where probably more or less globular when living, and owe their present shape to the character of their plates. This overlapping exists to a certain extent in all sea urchins, though, however, in an obscured way, and this feature is limited to a small part of the shell.

The new group of Pourtalesia was next described and defined to have embryonic characters, the compound perforations of the ambulacral plates of ordinary sea urchins being here reduced to a single simple perforation on each plate. This feature belongs to the young of all Echinoderms. The Professor then defined the marine districts into which he divides the sea-bottom in indicating the bathymetrical limits. The littoral district he throws to 100 or 150 fathoms; the continental, from 100 to 600 fathoms, and the oceanic, from 600 to 2,900. The continental sea-urchins date back to the Tertiary, and the oceanic to the time of the flood, of which they are very characteristic. All of the species collected by the Challenger had previously been detected by the Coast Survey in 1867 and later years. Prof. Agassiz also stated that a large part of the area of the ocean had not been examined by the Challenger, and, in fact, its only perfect extended line was between Australia and Cape Horn through the Antarctic Ocean. The principles areas left were the Indian Ocean, the Atlantic east of the United States, the South Atlantic, and much of the Pacific.

A KING-CRAB'S BRAIN.

Dr. Elliot Coues read a paper by Prof. A. S. Packard, Jr., on "The Internal Structure of the Brain of Limulus Polyphemus." This paper related to recent investigations by Prof. Packar don the common king-crab of our Atlantic coast. The results given by him in a recent paper are based on several hundred sections of the supraesophageal ganglion of Limulus, but more especially on one brain, cut into 83 sections, from 1-1000 to 1-600 of an inch in thickness. "The histological elements," Prof. Packard says, "are three in number: 1. Large ganglion cells, filled densely with granules, and with a well-defined nucleus similarly filled, and with a granular nucleolus. These cells terminate in large fibres which subdivide. 2. Nerve fibres; these, like the large-sized ganglion cells, from which they originate, are stained tawny brown with osmic acid. These fibres are coarse, their granular contents homogeneous. 3. Numerous very small nerve fibres, varying from a small diameter upward. 4. Rounded masses inclosed in a net-work of fibres. In staining they resemble the markballens of Diehl and the punctsubstanz of Leydig, but here the resemblance ends, as these balls are apparently composed of very minute nucleated cells and fine fibres arising from them. The general appearance of the brain of Limulus is very Crustacean compared with that of Decapodous Crustacea and insects. The brain is mostly composed of large irregular, rounded masses or balls of granules, with a thick fibrous stratum, forming the cortex, and a layer of secondary smaller, rounded, granular masses. The lower half of, or two-thirds or, the entire brain is filled with these fungoid masses. In the upper third of the brain, whence the nerves originate, the larger ganglionic cells and the nerve fibres project in a definite transverse tract, in relation to the entire brain. The asymmetry of the brain is remarkable. Histologically, judging by my specimens of the brain of the lobster, the brain of Limulus is seen to be more like that of arthropods is having similar large ganglion cells. The smaller ganglion cells, so abundant in the brains of insects and crustacea are wanting in Limulus. There are in Limulus no ballen substanz masses homologous with those of the other Arthropods. Topographically the internal structure of the brain of Limulus is constructed on a wholly different type from that of any other Arthropodous type known; so much so that it seems useless to attempt to homologize the different regions in his with those in other brains. The plan is simple in Limulus; much more complicated in Arthropods, especially in the brain of the crayfish, as from the Decapodous brain there arises two pairs of external nerves besides the optic pair, and in external form the two types of brain are entirely unlike.

VIBRATIONS OF TUNING-FORKS.

Prof. A. M. Mayer, of Hoboken, followed with a verbal communication on recent experiments made by him, with the aid of the Bache fund of the Academy, to "Determine the Length of Vibrations of Tuning-forks." For this purpose he used a revolving brass cylinder, coated with a blackened piece of fine printing paper, against which the tuning-fork worked, producing by its vibrations a sinuous line. Through the agency of an ingenious electrical apparatus, attached to a clock, the seconds, or swings of the pendulum, could be indicated on this line of vibration as minute punctures, caused by an electric spark. The number of vibrations in a second could then be easily read off. He stated that a decree Fahrenheit was found to increase or decrease the vibrations the 1-32,000 of a second. With the above apparatus Prof. Mayer has been enabled to determine the velocity of shot discharged from a gun, and as the result of his experiments he gave an interesting account of the theory of game shooting, which he said could not always be reduced to practice. He promised to issue at an early date a publication on "Shooting on the Wing."

BRAINS OF EXTINCT ANIMALS.

Prof. O. C. Marsh presented a long communication on the "Size of the Brain in Extinct Animals." The results of Prof. Marsh's investigation were expressed in the following law of brain growth: 1. All tertiary mammals had small brains. 2. There was a gradual increase in the size of the brain during this period. 3. The brain of the horse continued to the cerebral hemisphere, or higher portion of the brain. 4. In some groups the convolutions of the brain have gradually become more complicated. 5. In some the cerebellum and olfactory lobes have even diminished in size. 6. There is some evidence that the same general law of brain growth holds good for birds and reptiles from the Mesozoic to the present time.

A series of observations on the Odontornithes or birds with teeth, from the Cretaceous was first presented, and the skull and brain of the extinct Hesperornis were compared with those of the Loon (Colymbus), and the former was found to have a brain of less than one-third the size of the latter, and quite as reptilian in form and proportion. The brain in two Diomedeidæ (Albatross and Diomedea) was not compared with that of the crocodile. Hesperornis was found to have a brain very much smaller than the crocodile, and other Odontornithes were intermediate in size. It was also shown that of ancient animals those with small brains and large bodies were especially those that became extinct, those with large brains being more likely to survive.

The fifth communication was a verbal one by Prof. Wolcott Gibbs of Cambridge, "On New Complex Inorganic Acids," explanatory of recent very extensive researches on that subject. The Professor accompanied his remarks with many formulæ upon the blackboard, but his communication was of too technical a nature for transcribing here.

INVESTIGATIONS DURING ECLIPSES.

The closing paper of this day's session, and undoubtedly the one of most general interest and importance so far presented to the Academy at its meeting, was that by Mr. D. P. Todd, of the Nautical Almanac Office, on "The Use of the Electric Telegraph in Connection with Astronomical Observations, and a Method for Intra-Mercurial Planets." The paper gives a scheme whereby the rare moments of total eclipse may be utilized to their utmost extent. "Suppose eastern or western observing stations, on the line of any total eclipse, as widely separate as practicable, and equipped for another object of discovery during the progress of the eclipse, by the method suggested, in the electro-telegraphic transmission of important observations made at western stations to observers at eastern stations, with due speed for their verification and rejection when the latter shall reach the latter stations. Then for example, the the next total eclipse, that of 1885, May 16, on the occasion of which there will be some special circumstances which favor the execution of the plan. The path of the total eclipse lies almost wholly on land, beginning in Western Africa, traversing north-east, crossing Upper Egypt, the Red Sea, the Turks a few miles south of Bagdad, then passing a little to the south of Teheran, and traversing Central Asia, leaving that continent near Shanghai. The path of totality lies through several inhabited regions which are widely separate. These regions are connected by telegraphic cables and land-lines. From Mt-Akhmym, on the Nile, a fine run north to Alexandria, from which place Teheran is quite directly accessible by telegraph. From Teheran a land-line runs south-east through Beloochistan, and Hindostan to Madras, and thence cable lines connect Madras, Singapore, and Hong Kong with Shanghai. An additional advantage attaches to this eclipse line, as there is a duplicate line of telegraphic connection between Upper Egypt and Shanghai by way of Constantinople, Vienna, and Moscow, and thence through the Russian Overland Line through Siberia to Wladiwostok, and thence to Shanghai. Over this line a duplicate message might be sent, thus insuring beyond much doubt that any discovery made during totality in Egypt should be telegraphed immediately to observers at Shanghai. Now, suppose that an intramercurial planet is discovered at El-Akhmym. About 45 minutes of absolute time elapse before the shadow reaches Teheran. Meanwhile, the exact position of the planet may be telegraphed to the latter station, and the observer there will have abundance of time to prepare to verify the observation so soon as the eclipse becomes total. The observations at El-Akhmym, and those at Teheran might also be telegraphed to Shanghai—this latter place not being reached by the lunar shadow until more than two hours after it leaves Teheran. The amount of time consumed in getting a message through, under the most favorable circumstances, from Egypt to Shanghai, would be about half an hour. But the courtesy of telegraphic companies hitherto shown to astronomers encourages the belief that they would do everything in their power on such an occasion to expedite the message."

Mr. Todd presented, also, a brief extract of a paper which he had written two years ago, before the eclipse of 1878, proposing a method of search for intramercurial planets at any given station. The plan involves a systematic subdivision of the search—it must be a conjoint work, as each portion of the sky must be minutely examined, and no eclipse observer can hope to do only one or two observers to search thoroughly all that part of the heavens in which intramercurial planets may be likely to be found. The amount of sky adjacent to the sun which it is desirable to search must be decided upon beforehand, and parceled out (in zones by several) astronomers—who commit to memory the magnitudes and relative positions of the known stars in their zones, so that, when observing during the eclipse, they can say at once whether there are any new objects visible. Each observer should compare his memory of the zone with the actual heavens many times before the eclipse, using the same telescope and magnifying power which he will use during the eclipse. He should also compare his memory of the stars with the heavens during twilight of such intensity as may be required equal to the light of the sky during an eclipse of the sun. Mr. Todd also proposed some mechanical devices for attachment to the telescope of each observer, so that his attention need not be taken from that part of the sky over which he is searching during the eclipse.

YESTERDAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—At to-day's meeting of the National Academy of Sciences the following Council was elected for the ensuing year: S. F. Baird, Wolcott Gibbs, Asaph Hall, J. R. Hilgard, Clarence King, and Simon Newcomb. Certain proposed amendments to the constitution were discussed, and it was decided to hold the Fall meeting at New-York, Nov. 16, for the reading of scientific papers only. The following papers were read to-day: By E. M. Green, on "The Telegraphic Determinations of Longitude by the United States Hydrographic Office;" T. S. Hunt on the "Tatonic System of Geology;" S. P. Langley on "An Instrument for Measuring Radiant Heat and on the Composition of Colors;" E. S. Holden on "The Nebula of Orion;" Theodore N. Gill on "The Distribution of Teuo Conchifera;" William Harkness on "The Solar Corona;" E. S. Morse on "An Early Race of Man in Japan." On account of the number of papers still remaining for presentation, an extra session will be held to-morrow.

DISASTER AND DEATH AT SEA.

THE CREWS OF TWO SINKING VESSELS SAVED BY NORWEGIAN SAILORS.

The Norwegian bark Sea Breeze, which arrived from Rotterdam yesterday, brought the entire crew of the brig Annie Wharton, bound from London for New-Haven, which was abandoned March 28, in latitude 41°, longitude 51°. Capt. Lawrence, of the lost brig, reports that on the 20th of March he was caught in a heavy north-easterly gale. The vessel labored badly and sprung a leak. One of the pumps was manned and kept going constantly, but the leak gained steadily on the crew. The brig was hove to and remained in that condition until the morning of the 23d. At 8 o'clock that morning she rolled in a frightful manner, and one of the fore dead-eye strops gave way. With this the foretopmast went over the side, dragging the maintop-mast with it and disabling the foreyard. The brig fell off before the wind, and the heavy seas swept over her, smashing in the skylights and filling the cabin with water. There were four feet of water in the hold, and the dead cargo of some 350 tons of scrap-iron threatened to sink the vessel at any moment. "Cut away the wreck," cried Capt. Lawrence, as he seized an axe to set his men the example. Instead of obeying, their spokesman called his attention to a bark about one mile distant. "We can't keep her afloat any longer, Captain," said he; "our only chance lies with the bark." A signal of distress was hoisted, and shortly afterward the Sea Breeze came up. The brig's boat was lowered with great difficulty and made two trips to the bark, transferring Capt. Lawrence, a passenger and the entire crew of eight men. In making the last trip the boat was stove by being hurled against the bark's side by a heavy sea. Its occupants narrowly escaped drowning. It is thought that the Annie Wharton could have kept afloat but a short time after she was abandoned. She was brig-rigged, registered 297 tons, and was owned by A. D. McLean, of Shelburne, Nova Scotia. The Sea Breeze had a very stormy voyage. On March 8 Capt. Jacobsen sighted a brig in distress. He sent one of his officers on board of her. She proved to be the D'Artagnan, bound for Falmouth. Her master and mate had been washed overboard a fortnight before. The second mate, who was in command, was given the distance and course to the English Channel, but he refused Capt. Jacobsen's offer to send an officer on board to navigate the vessel to port. The 19th of April was a severely stormy day. At 4 o'clock that morning a bark was observed near by, steering in the same direction as the Sea Breeze, with everything furled but the lower topsails and a reefed foresail. A terrific snow-squall then struck the Sea Breeze, and the stranger was lost sight of. A half hour elapsed before the atmosphere again became clear. The strange bark, however, was nowhere to be seen. There is no doubt that she went down with all on board during the squall. It was still blowing heavily, and it was impossible for the Sea Breeze to beat up to where the stranger had last been seen.

The ship Alexandrovsia arrived from Liverpool late Wednesday night, and anchored in the Lower Bay. Capt. Churchill says that on the 18th, in latitude 41° 20', and longitude 68°, the bark G. S. Fenery was spoken. Her mate reported that Capt. Fenery had been lost overboard two days before. The bark was short of provisions, and a fresh supply was sent her from the ship. The bark arrived at this port last evening in command of Mate Newson. The bark J. W. Whitney, from Amsterdam, passed the bark Ulster, of St. John, on March 29. The latter had been abandoned, and the seas were washing over her fore and aft.

The Dele and Sabina, a Norwegian bark, which arrived last evening from Rotterdam, had on board the crew of the ship Evangeline, Capt. Munson, who were obliged to abandon their vessel on April 1, in latitude 40° 2', and longitude 70° 40'. The Evangeline was bound from Liverpool for Philadelphia, with a cargo of iron and rags. On March 30 a heavy gale from the south-south-west set in. The sails were furled as quickly as possible, but the ship rolled badly, and finally sprang a leak. The pumps were manned, but, the weather continuing bad, the leak steadily gained on the men. For three weeks the ship continued on her course, but each gale told upon her, and on April 9 she was in a sinking condition. Her crew were exhausted from exposure and overwork at the pumps. During the day the Dele and Sabina was sighted, and the crew, 16 men all told, abandoned the sinking ship, saving only their clothing and the ship's papers and instruments. They were received on board the bark, where they were kindly treated during the remainder of the voyage. One of the Evangeline's seamen named Albert Hansen fell overboard and was drowned several days before the Norwegian vessel was sighted.

The ship Cosmo, which arrived from Antwerp yesterday, reports that during the passage F. Ingersen, a young English sailor, was thrown overboard while the vessel was rolling heavily on March 14, and was drowned before assistance could reach him. On the 29th ult., Michael Hardy, the sail-maker, also fell from the main yard into the water from the mainhead and was drowned.

THE COURT OF APPEALS.

The following business was transacted by the Court of Appeals yesterday: No. 177—Jane M. Van Brunt, respondent, vs. Edward P. Day, appellant; argued by S. C. Comble for appellant, W. S. Cogswell for respondent. No. 186—Charles H. Haswell, appellant, vs. The Mayor, &c., of New-York, respondents; argued by Elliot Sandford for appellant, D. J. Dean for respondent. No. 196—Pierre H. Van Wyck, by William H. Beaver, his committee, &c., appellant, vs. Archibald M. Brasher et al., respondents; argued by Samuel Hand for appellant, E. M. Cullen for respondents. No. 179—Alexis Gonillot, respondent, vs. Edward C. Hazard et al., appellants; argued by Hugh Porter for appellants; Nelson Smith for respondent.

SOMERSET COUNTY FRAUDS

TRYING TO OBTAIN RESTITUTION OF THE STOLEN MONEY.

"DICTATOR" CORY'S TRIAL POSTPONED UNTIL SEPTEMBER ON A TRUMPED-UP STORY—HOW THE COUNTY WAS DEFRAUDED—METHODS OF THE RING TO STAVE OFF JUSTICE.

SOMERVILLE, N. J., April 21.—The April Term of the Somerset County Circuit Court opened Tuesday morning. Judge Magie presided. The first case on the calendar is that of the County against Daniel Cory, to recover money wrongfully appropriated by him as Freeholder. This case is only the beginning of the attempts to bring the notorious swindlers of Somerset County to justice. The Somerset Gazette undertook a thorough examination of the condition of things last Summer. Afterward a committee of experts was appointed by Judge Dalrimple. Among the revelations made by the Gazette were the increased taxation within the past 10 years, caused by the swindles of the Ring, with Cory and Jones at its head; Bridge bills paid to Cory personally, amounting to $9,624 92 in seven years; excessive payments on the new Bound Brook bridge of $21,711 16; hotel and horse-feed bills paid to the Freeholders, amounting to $1,600 in one year; a theft of $8,000 in the erection of the Washington-Avenue bridge; suppression of a report of the board in 1870, in which illegal bills were set forth and ordered paid; extra cost of new jail, $5,187 68; 129 illegal meetings of the board in 12 years, for which the county had been taxed. The investigating committee was in session 45 days. It examined 55 witnesses, actually inspected 77 bridges and culverts in Warren Township, (the home of Cory,) and seven or eight large bridges in other portions of the county. Its report, which was rendered on Jan. 13, fully corroborated the previous disclosures, denounced the system of bridge-building, and showed at length the different methods by which the citizens of Somerset had been swindled. Its investigations were greatly hindered by the theft of the books and vouchers of the County Collector, J. V. Veghte.

The suit against "Dictator" Cory brings into review his curious life. He was born just where he now resides, in 1809. He assaulted a man at the Martinsville Tavern, in 1857, for differing with him politically, was tried, found guilty, and fined $41 50. When execution was issued to collect the fine, he was going to appeal. One Sheriff after another came into office, but still the fine was unpaid. Finally, in 1866, 10 years after the indictment, the board, then under Cory's control, ordered the claim to be cancelled, which was accordingly done. During the civil war Cory was elected to the Legislature, and had a bill passed for the reimbursement of citizens in Warren Township "who had paid more than their proportion of bounties to volunteers." Bounties given the township were $9,000, all of which was pocketed, it has been asserted, by Cory. His secession sentiments led to his lodgment in Fort Lafayette in 1862, but on his release he renewed his fraudulent plans. As a bridge-builder he has no equal in this country. From 1867 to 1877 he received $3,035 11 for the repairing of bridges. From that time until 1871 he received large amounts for bridge repairs, and also presented bills, made out in the names of neighbors, when he thought he had improved their credit. In 1871, during the December term of the Oyer and Terminer, 1872, the Grand Jury made an official inquiry into the management of county affairs from 1868 to 1870, and made a presentment. The forgeries of his neighbors' names were not then known. The Board of Freeholders ordered suits to be brought against Cory and Adams. The Referees found a verdict against them for $5,286 77. Legal delays followed, and the case has never come up again. Now, after all these manifold delays, and after Cory, by some means, has been retained in office, appropriating $34,870 70 of the county's funds during his administrations, the case is placed on the list for trial.

The struck jury, previously drawn, was called Tuesday, and Congressman Alvah A. Clark, Cory's counsel, presented a challenge to the array. Judge Magie said that it was the first time in his 10 years' experience that a challenge to the array could be presented, that the court would take a recess to consider the matter. Immediately upon the reassembling of the court, Mr. Clark moved for an postponement of the entire case, on the ground that a very material witness, D. L. Robinson, was absent in California, and could not be procured. The Counsel for the County, J. Newton Voorhees, J. V. Bartine, and A. V. D. Honeyman, opposed this motion earnestly and strenuously. They offered to withdraw the bill of particulars in which Robinson's name was mentioned, and contended that in that case he was not an important witness, and that the movement was only another attempt to ward off justice. Judge Magie finally said he felt constrained to let the suit go over until September.

Facts have been revealed within the past 24 hours which show that an attempt has been made by the "Ring" to prevent Cory's trial, or the indictment of the County Collector by the Grand Jury. This morning, on the opening of the court, Mr. Voorhees began to ask the court to adjourn the Grand Jury for a few days, as he wanted to consult with Attorney-General Stockton as to the constitutionality of the present Grand Jury. Judge Magie said there certainly seemed to have been irregularities in the summoning of the jurors, and he directed it expedient to dismiss the Grand Jury until Friday morning.

Sheriff Van Liew has been sick for several weeks, and was in bed at the time when the Grand Jury was to be summoned. It had always been supposed that he was a friend of the county, and would not yield to the influence of the "Ring." That supposition was a mistaken one. When the time for the summoning came, Van Liew ordered his attorney, W. W. Anderson, of this town, to strike from the list of available tax-payers a sufficient number of names to be summoned. Mr. Anderson is a firm supporter of the reform movement, and he selected a set of perfectly honest, upright men. This list was published, and gave great satisfaction to the citizens generally. Sheriff Van Liew did not learn of it for several days, and then he ordered his attorney to "put back every man who had been stricken off." The Grand Jury, struck jury, as it was known, was also in court, and now the question arises as to which is the legal jury. Van Liew's jury was recognized yesterday by the Judge, but it is believed he was misled by false statements. As heretofore stated, this jury was dismissed this morning until Friday. Mr. Anderson is so indignant at the Sheriff that he has given him notice that he will not act as his attorney any longer. In addition to the trouble with the Grand Jury, it appears that the Sheriff was persuaded to allow Byron Thornton, the Coroner of the county, to summon the general panel of petit jurors for Tuesday. This is contrary to the statute, which is construed to the effect that either the Sheriff or Under Sheriff must summon the jurors, and not the Coroner. If this be true, all the panel is irregular.

The story about the absence of an important witness, by which Cory induced the court to postpone his suit yesterday until September, was a trumped-up affair. The witness, D. L. Robinson, is a worthless man, and Cory got a friend of his to pay Robinson's way out West. Cory himself furnishing the money. The counsel for the County knew of two very important witnesses from distant parts of the country, one of them, J. S. Brown, being brought from Florida last week and secreted here for the trial. In order not to lose their testimony, or be compelled to bring them here again, their depositions were taken before J. P. Prelinghuysen this evening. They testified to the forging of bridge bills in their names by Daniel Cory, ten bills having been forged by him in Brown's name alone.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE'S NEW BUILDING.

The Stock Exchange has formally adopted the plan devised by Architect Renwick for the enlargement of their building. This consists in an adherence as far as possible to the style of the present edifice. The recently purchased building on Broad-street will be altered so as to correspond with the present entrance on that street. It will have an iron front and a large doorway precisely similar, and will be of the same height, so that the effect will be to practically double that portion of the Exchange, to make the "Long Room" twice as wide as it is now, and to give twice the present amount of office room up stairs. The recently purchased buildings on the New-street side will be altered into an extension of the Board Room, which will be made 141 feet long and 51 feet wide, just double the size of the present Board Room. A large glass dome will light the centre. A second doorway will give ingress to and egress from the Board Room on this side. The work of alteration is to be begun on May 1, and the expenditure is limited to $400,000. The proceeds of the recent sale of 40 seats, after paying for the additional land purchase, left a surplus of $211,000, which is to be applied to this purpose. The remainder will be taken out of the general fund.

ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY OF PHILADELPHIA.

The last report of the Zoological Society of Philadelphia, issued to-day, presents many interesting features, and as contemporaneous with that of the Prospect Park Menagerie, may afford some opportunities of comparison. The Secretary, John Samuel Rex, states that the number of visitors has not equaled the expectations of the Directors, there having been a decrease from the previous year of 34,625. Notwithstanding this, by means of economy, exercised in the management of the business of the society, the average daily receipts had exceeded the average daily expenses by over $20 a day. The total visitors for the year up to March 1, were 216,194, against 250,769 in 1878-9. The total receipts were $41,239 25, being some $8,181 less than during the preceding year. It is on Sunday that the largest number of visitors and the best receipts were made, the Sundays during the year representing $18,780, while on the Tuesdays the receipts were only $2,291. In salaries and general expenses, it took $23,128 to run the zoological garden, salaries alone representing some $9,850. Mr. Arthur S. Brown, the Superintendent, states that 500 mammals, 218 birds, 41 reptiles, and 45 reptiles, valued at $46,978, represent the collection. Among the notable animals received in October last was a young female orang-outang, "Sarah Jane," which, having been provided with a cage lined with sponges, has so far resisted the effects of our Winters, being at present in excellent condition. Quite a large number of animals have been born during the year in the garden, including a macaque monkey, a zebu, two buffaloes, three Virginia deer, three mule deer, two wapiti deer, eaglets, opossums, two red, three great, and one pale kangaroos. Attempts to raise mule deer do not seem, however, to be successful, and that they die when bred at a distance from the country of their origin is a fact which seems to be repeated in Philadelphia. Mr. Brown notes the diminished relative mortality of the past three years, and attributes it to the better hygienic measures observed in the construction of the cages, the character of the food, and maintenance of proper temperature. The greatest loss met during the year was that of the giraffe, who died from renal calculi. The society may be considered fortunate in having had many animals presented during the year, and among them a pair of fallow deer, given by the Earl of Powis.

RANDOLPH FOUND GUILTY.

WILLIAM SIMPSON'S ASSAILANT SENT TO SING SING FOR TEN YEARS.

George C. Randolph, who shot and wounded William Simpson, Jr., the pawnbroker, at the latter's place of business, No. 27 Chatham-street, was placed on trial for felonious assault by Assistant District Attorney Bell, in General Sessions, yesterday. The prisoner, in December, 1878, wrote a letter to Mr. Simpson demanding $1,500 as reparative for his wife's alienated affections, and his own blighted life, threatening if the money was not paid to shoot Simpson on sight. Instead of submitting to the black-mail, Simpson had Randolph arrested and indicted, but subsequently failed to prosecute, and the case was never brought to trial. The facts disclosed at that time showed that Simpson had been intimate with Linda Randolph, née Alice Lee, the wife of Randolph, and that the latter had made this the pretext of extorting money from Simpson. From the time of the exposure, in 1878, nothing further was heard of the Randolph-Simpson difficulties until April 5 last, when Randolph entered Simpson's pawn office, and twice requested the latter to accord him an interview. Simpson took no notice of his request, and continued to wait on his customers, whereupon Randolph drew a revolver and shot him in the lip, the bullet glancing off Simpson's teeth, and making its exit through the left cheek. Simpson fell, stunned, behind the counter, and Randolph, reaching over, shot him again, the ball taking effect in the back, from which it has not since been extracted. When the case was called yesterday, Mr. Simpson was in court and testified. His testimony was corroborated by his partner, Somers, and Officer Rooney. William Sinclair, formerly Clerk of the Supreme Court, testified that Randolph had called on him the day before the shooting, and witness informed him that Simpson, in answer to a note requesting with Randolph in relation to Mrs. Randolph, had declined to have anything to say to the prisoner.

Randolph, who is a rather attractive-looking man of 40, took the witness stand in his own behalf. He said he was a native of Washington, D. C., and previous to his arrest lived at No. 108 East Eighty-third-street. He married his wife, Alice Lee, about three years ago. On ascertaining from Mr. Sinclair that Simpson had refused to hold any intercourse with him he visited the latter's pawn office and demanded an interview. Simpson took no notice of his request, but turned to a counter on which lay a number of pistols and other weapons. Believing that Simpson intended to shoot, and that his (Randolph's) life was in peril, he drew his revolver and shot in self-defense, surrendering himself immediately.

The jury were only out 10 minutes, and returned a verdict of guilty of assault with intent to kill. Judge Cowing, in passing sentence, said that the prisoner escaped from a graver offense only because the bullets he fired at Mr. Simpson had failed to accomplish his design. There was little doubt that the prisoner intended to kill his victim, and it was no fault of his that Mr. Simpson was not now in his grave. Sufficient had been developed in the course of the trial to show that it was a case of black-mail. This offense had become too common in the community, and it was high time that Grand Juries and courts took decided action, in order that this class of offenders might receive the punishment they so richly deserved. Black-mailers disturbed the peace of the community, and were the original cause of many of the most serious crimes committed. In the case at issue there was no justification for the shooting, and if ever a man deserved the full penalty of his crime, this was the man. Randolph then sentenced Randolph to the full penalty prescribed by law, 10 years in State Prison, at hard labor. The prisoner heard the sentence with the utmost indifference, and chatted pleasantly with his lawyer as he held out his hands to be manacled.

A DOCTOR'S ATTEMPTED SUICIDE.

TRYING TO END A MISERABLE AND DISGRACEFUL LIFE.

On Wednesday night a stranger asked to be assigned a room in the hotel at No. 16 Fulton-street, Brooklyn, and registered as G. Manning. He did not appear yesterday morning, and at noon the proprietor of the hotel sent a clerk to the man's room. Manning was found lying in bed unconscious, and near him were two papers labeled "Morphine." The Police were notified, and an ambulance being sent for, he was taken to the Long Island College Hospital. In his clothing two documents were found. One of them was an order from Judge Nelson, of the Brooklyn City Court, dated April 21, permitting Manning to see his two children, now in the custody of his divorced wife, and upon the reverse side of the order was the following letter in Manning's handwriting:

BROOKLYN, April 21, 1880.

My original intention was to shoot myself through the head in the City Court House, which would be the most appropriate place to terminate a miserable and disgraceful life. Not owning a pistol, I have to resort to the use of ale and morphine. On consideration, I have come to the conclusion that a man of spirit, honor, and honesty should die rather than live a life of degradation and degradation. The Coroner may give my body to the Long Island College, as my family cannot afford to go to any expense, and I would not wish that they would even if they could.

JOHN G. MANNING.

The other document was a letter from Stephen English, as follows:

127 BROADWAY, N. Y., April 13, 1880.

John G. Manning, Esq., Jersey City:

DEAR SIR—Your letter left at the Equitable Life office, and found that you had not been rejected, but "declined at present." Pulse high, arising from nervous excitement. Try another company. Yours truly,

A card was also found bearing the address, "John G. Manning, M. D., No. 239 New-York-avenue, Jersey City Heights." Manning used to reside in Brooklyn, and was formerly quite wealthy, having been one of the firm of Manning, Maxwell & Moore, of Baltic and Clinton streets, in that city. He had had some trouble with his wife, and at one time charged her with attempting to kill him. She made a counter-charge of a similar character. Divorce suits followed, in which Mrs. Manning was victorious. Latterly Manning has been poor, having lost his position. The physicians at the Long Island College Hospital think he cannot recover from the effects of the morphine he took.

NO REMEDY FOR JACOB A. HATZEL.

Jacob A. Hatzel was cheated out of the office of Alderman, to which he was elected in the Sixth District in 1878. He ran on the Tammany ticket with George Hall, who was returned as having been elected with two Anti-Tammany Aldermen. Hall was given a certificate of election by the Board of Aldermen acting as Canvassers. It was shown subsequently that the Inspectors of Election did not make returns in due form to the Board of Canvassers, and that the original record of voting in one of the election districts had been altered so that Hall was credited with 30 votes that were cast for Hatzel. Three of the Election Inspectors were convicted in the Court of Oyer and Terminer of violating the Election laws, and are now in the Penitentiary. Hatzel brought a quo warranto suit against Hall, but it was dismissed by Judge Lawrence on the ground that the plaintiff's remedy was to have the action of the Board of Aldermen in admitting the defendant to a seat in it reviewed by certiorari. Hatzel obtained a writ of certiorari, and a hearing in the case was had before Judge Donohue, in Supreme Court, Chambers, last week, four months after the Board of Aldermen in which George Hall acted had gone out of existence. Judge Donohue gave a decision yesterday, quashing the writ on the ground that Hatzel allowed too long a time to pass before he procured it.

THE WILSON INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

The twenty-seventh anniversary of the Wilson Industrial School for Girls was held yesterday in the mission building, Avenue A and St. Mark's-place. After some interesting songs and recitations had been listened to from the children in the large hall, the latter were addressed by the Rev. Dr. C. D'W. Bridgeman. The children were then dismissed, and the audience retired to the parlors, where the Treasurer's and school reports were read, and suitable addresses made by the Rev. Drs. Bridgeman and William T. Sabine. The Wilson Industrial School for Girls was organized in 1853, and incorporated the following year. It now embraces a day-school, house-work and kitchen-garden classes, a mission church and Sabbath-school, and a circulating library. The average attendance of children during the last school year was 171. The Treasurer's report shows that the institution begins the year with about $600 to its credit in the treasury.

ON A TOUR OF INSPECTION.

Secretary Sherman arrived in town yesterday morning. After a brief visit to the Sub-Treasury, he proceeded to the Custom-house, where he spent the afternoon. He was accompanied by his private secretary, Mr. Babcock. Ex-Gov. Fenton had a brief interview with him, and ex-Gov. Morgan was subsequently closeted with him for over an hour. Mr. Sherman took lunch with Collector Merritt, Gen. Fearing was of the party. Cigars were afterward obtained from the Genuine Room, the Secretary going down and selecting them himself. In the evening Mr. Sherman dined with the members of the alleged Sherman Club. In response to questions as to the object of his visit, he said that he was here merely on one of his "regular tours of inspection," and that no business of public importance was contemplated. The other gentlemen mentioned were equally reticent.

THE POLICE INSPECTORSHIPS.

USELESS AND EXPENSIVE OFFICES WHICH SHOULD BE ABOLISHED.

The vacancy in the Third Inspection District of the Police Department, caused by the death of Inspector John McDermott, will, it is said, be filled by the promotion of Capt. Thomas Byrnes, recently transferred from the command of the Fifteenth Precinct to the position of Chief of the Central Office detective force. Since the death of the late Inspector Speight, there have been two Republican and two Democratic Inspectors, but prior to the appointment of Inspector Murray, his successor, politics were not taken into consideration in filling vacancies. One of the principal reasons for the probable appointment of Capt. Byrnes arises from the fact that he is regarded as the most eligible Democrat of the force for the position. The existence of a vacancy now, has revived the discussion of the question as to the advisability of abolishing the four Inspectorships. Gentlemen conversant with the general administration of the Police Department believe that the Inspectors are more ornamental than useful, and that their offices, or at least the presents system of utilizing their services, ought to be wiped out. The salary of each is $3,500, making an aggregate of $14,000 per year, to which is added the salaries of several Sergeants, roundsmen, patrolmen, and four doormen detailed to the Inspectors' offices. It is asserted that the district system serves rather to retard the efficiency of the force than to promote it, by taking men from regular posts and adding to the work of Sergeants on desk duty at the station-houses. The latter are obliged to transmit to the offices of the Inspectors a complete copy of the returns and a full record of everything which occurs in the stations. Complaints of citizens against members of the force are frequently made to the Inspectors, who decide whether or not to send them to Headquarters for trial. The Inspectors can, if they please, cover cases of delinquency and other breaches of discipline with a mantle of secrecy, or they can blacken the characters of officers who may be so unfortunate as to fail under their displeasure. In point of fact, nearly everything happening in the precinct is filtered through the Inspectors' offices before it reaches either the Commissioners or the Superintendent. Without the assistance of the Captains the Inspectors possess comparatively little political influence, but leagued with the former they can wield a great deal of power at an election.

The votes of liquor-dealers who keep their places open on Sundays, and those of all classes of criminals who have indictments hanging over them, or can be indicted at any time, are absolutely controlled by the Captains, and this sort of influence is necessarily shared in by the Inspectors who may be in harmony with unscrupulous Captains. The law intended that the Inspectors should be employed in the capacity of aids to the Superintendent, two to visit the stations and two to perform desk duty at the Central Office, believing that the work could be just as efficiently performed by four of the oldest Captains, and the Inspectorships could be safely dispensed with. The closing of their expensive offices would result in the transfer of Sergeants and men to posts where they are sadly needed at present.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The date printed on the wrapper of each paper denotes the time when the subscription expires.

The Signal Service Bureau report indicates for to-day, in this region, falling; followed by rising, barometer, south-west, shifting to colder north and west, winds, partly cloudy weather, numerous rains.

In the Senate, yesterday, the Army Appropriation bill was finally passed as it came from the House. As the "rider" of the bill disarmed the United States forces, it was sought, on the other hand, to disarm the men who hang around the polling-places for the purpose of terrifying Republican voters. This proposition was defeated, and the Democrats have put themselves on record as being in favor of promiscuous and individual arming, but opposed to any armed Police from any quarter.

The Assembly Committee on Cities, of which Mr. VARNUM is Chairman, have made their report on the street-cleaning system of this City. While the committee were here, it was apparent that they were determined to go into the subject very thoroughly. The result is the presentation of a report which is exhaustive and full of all necessary detail. The conclusions of the committee, however, are of more immediate importance to our citizens than the statistics and facts gathered. The committee are of the opinion that the excessive cost of our street-cleaning, and the failure to do the work properly are due to what is mildly called "a lack of intelligent co-operation between the force which collects street refuse and that which removes it." When we consider that there has been abundant evidence that this lack of intelligent co-operation is sometimes due to a tacit agreement to squander the City's money, the case has been put very guardedly. The committee also note the incapacity with which the affairs of the Street-cleaning Bureau have been administered, and recommend a reorganization of the bureau without disengaging it from the Police Department. The long and short of the whole matter is that there is, strictly speaking, no street-cleaning system in this City.

The Governor has signed the bill providing that the shareholders of State banks shall be assessed and taxed upon their shares of stock "only at the same rate and place, to the same extent and in the same manner" as shareholders in national banks may be liable to be assessed and taxed by authority of the State. This looks like putting the two classes of institutions on the same footing, but it is difficult to adjust burdens equitably where there is no equality of authority in regard to the subject of taxation. The national banks pay to the United States Government one per cent. per annum on the average amount of their circulating notes, one-half of one per cent. on the average amount of their deposits, and one-half of one per cent. on the amount of their capital stock beyond what is invested in Government bonds. The State banks have no circulating notes, but there is still pending in the Legislature the bill of the Special Committee on Taxation, which proposes to subject them to an annual tax of one-half of one per cent. on their capital and one-half of one per cent. on their average deposits. If this becomes a law, State and national banks will stand on a footing of at least approximate equality in the matter of taxation; if it should fail, there will still be a perceptible difference in their burdens.

Shortly after noon to-day the resolutions concerning the right of Senator KELLOGG, of Louisiana, to a seat in the Senate will be called up for discussion. There does not seem to be much danger that Senator KELLOGG will be ejected from the Senate. The real danger is that Senator HILL will make a long and elaborate speech. So far as understood, Mr. HILL does not propose to show that KELLOGG should be put out of the Senate, but that he is responsible, to a limited degree, for the destruction of Senator HILL's alleged character. Curiously enough, Senator HILL has not only a party axe to grind, but a personal grievance to amend. He swears that KELLOGG, aided and abetted by his friends, has maligned his character and has ruined his reputation. The motive of all this persecution, according to the virtuous HILL, is to divert attention from the real issue, which is the unseating of KELLOGG. But, since KELLOGG is to remain in his seat, it follows that Senator HILL can only make his record good by delivering a speech which shall be fiery enough to vindicate him with a Georgia constituency. If KELLOGG, the President, and several other public men are engaged in a conspiracy to suppress HILL, we should be glad to have them understand that they are engaged in a very small business.

If all strikes could be adjusted as amicably as the long contest at the Cohoes Mills has been, there would be less friction in the relations between capital and labor. The men, several thousand in number, demanded 10 per cent. advance in their wages and an hour at noon. This was refused and work stopped. From Feb. 26 until now, 275,000 spindles have been idle, and the payment of wages to the amount of $5,000 per day was suspended. In addition to this, fifteen hundred civil suits were brought by employes against the mill-owners to recover wages alleged to be due them on account of a failure to notify them of cessation of work. Thus a comparatively petty dispute, which might have been adjusted as well in the first instance as now, has entailed great loss of money and temper, as well as vexation, upon all concerned. Mutual concessions have resulted in an acceptable settlement, and, amid great rejoicing, work is resumed in the mills. Somebody should learn a lesson from this long and wasteful contest.

THE OBSTRUCTIONIST COMMITTEE.

The committee of the House which by grim irony is called the Committee of Ways and Means held another meeting yesterday, when its sub-committee had been instructed to report what could and should be done with the measures of tariff reform. But the sub-committee knows better than to conform to any formal instructions, and has a much clearer idea of the real desire and intent of the autocratic body to which its members belong than can be gathered from its published proceedings. The sub-committee did not report. Two members were added to its number, to enable it to do nothing with even greater certainty and vigor, and then the main committee took its customary adjournment, and went back tranquilly to the House, and resumed its task of watching that no one should get in a reform bill in spite of them. This continual obstinacy of the committee in protecting the private interests which are sheltered by our present onerous tariff is a persistent outrage upon the rights of the House, upon the principles of representative government, and upon the country, of which some of the most important concerns are completely in the committee's hands. The House has already declared, in the most unmistakable manner, its desire to have an opportunity to vote on the various propositions to modify the tariff. It went to the length of sustaining Mr. TOWNSHEND in a clearly unparliamentary and disingenuous device for getting some of these propositions before it without the interposition of the Committee of Ways and Means. One of the members of the committee, Mr. MORRISON, of Illinois, has very justly said that the vote of the House in this matter was a vote of instruction to the committee to report. Yet the committee mulishly refuses to either approve or disapprove the various measures submitted to it. It has taken all necessary testimony; it has ample means for reaching a conclusion; it is no longer pursuing any inquiry; it is simply dodging its duty.

Such conduct on the part of the members of the committee who are guilty of it is not only a gross violation of the rights of the House, but it is an arbitrary usurpation of power which the rules of the House were not intended to confide to them. The business of the committee is to examine the questions referred to it, and to report its opinion to the House. If that opinion be adverse, and the House is still interested in any of the questions, a report is equally required. The fact that under the rules of the House, it is practically impossible to take action without a report from the committee is an accident. The House never meant to give the committee the right, though it may have the actual power, to kill a bill by suffocation, regardless of what the House may wish in the premises. For the committee to assume this right is for it to steal the authority, which should rest in the House, to decide measures of public interest. Such a course is obviously an infringement on the right of the people to have such measures acted on by the whole body of their Representatives. It is, in effect, the transfer of an essential part of the prerogative of Congress to the majority of a committee of one house of Congress. The whole thing is undemocratic and unrepublican. It is so completely so that it is difficult to explain the behavior of the committee on any ground consistent at once with their possession of common intelligence and personal integrity.

The gentlemen who are engaged, in the Committee of Ways and Means, in fighting tariff reform pretend, so far as they condescend to explain their course, to be acting in the interest of "American industry." We commend to their attention some remarks made in the House of Representatives ten years since by a then honored and ambitious member. "What is 'American industry?'" he asked; and he answered: "I reject that narrow view which considers 'industry' any one particular form of labor. I object to any theory that treats the industries of the country as they were treated in the last census, when we had one schedule for 'agriculture,' and another for 'industry,' as though agriculture were not an industry, as though commerce and trade and transportation were not industries." And, after showing that the true protection to American industry was "to secure extensive markets," he warned the protectionists as follows: "I am firmly of the opinion that the wisest thing that the protectionists in this House can do is to unite in a moderate reduction of duties on imported articles. * * * If I do not misunderstand the signs of the times, unless we do this ourselves, prudently and wisely, we shall before long be compelled to submit to a violent reduction, made rudely and without discrimination, which will shock, if not shatter, all our protected industries."

The gentleman who made these very sensible and statesmanlike remarks was the Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD, of Ohio. We advise him to resume the study of the "signs of the times."

IS NOBODY TO BLAME?

Everybody who had any share in the responsibility for the proper construction of that part of the Madison-Square Garden which tumbled into ruins on Wednesday night, crushing several persons to death and injuring many more, puts in a plea of not guilty, as was to be expected. All parties concerned are eager to shift responsibility from their own shoulders, and they leave no resting place for it. But the public will not be satisfied with their explanations. After every reasonable plea in extenuation has been allowed, there remains the terrible fact of the calamity, and it is certainly one that ought not to have occurred. It was no inevitable result of circumstances that could not be foreseen or discovered by a proper scrutiny of the work. Whatever may be urged to the contrary, the building was not subjected to any extraordinary strain. It gave way in consequence of defective construction, and for that somebody is to blame, and the guilty person should not be allowed to escape the penalty of his criminal negligence.

The representative of the proprietor, which is the New-York Central Railroad Company, claims that every proper precaution was taken, when the new part of the walls and of the supports of the roof was constructed last Winter, to have the work thoroughly and securely done. The plans received the approval of the Department of Buildings, the mason work was intrusted to a firm of high standing, and the final result received official sanction, upon which public confidence is expected to rest. The contractors vehemently vouch for the solidity and security of the walls, and Superintendent DUDLEY insists that so far as faithful inspection could discover, it was a good job. Nevertheless, an examination, after the mischief which inspection is intended to prevent has happened, reveals a defect in one of the supporting timbers of the roof, which caused it to give way, and bring such a pressure upon the walls as to topple them over. Whether this was the sole defect in the construction of that part of the building may well be doubted. All the persons liable to be inculpated cry out with one voice, "It was the dancing that did it." The room used for that diversion was never intended for any such purpose, and should not have been so used. But the fact is not denied that the building was intended for public exhibitions and amusement of a great variety of kinds. It was rented for the Hahnemann Hospital Fair without any restriction or warning as to the security of this or any other part of the structure for any of the adjuncts of such an entertainment. The managers had not the slightest reason to suppose that this particular room was unsafe for the purpose. Nor ought it to have been. Any floor in a building of that kind should be secure for any use to which it is liable to be put, and if the walls or the supports of the roof were likely to be shaken down by the dancing of such a moderate-sized and orderly company as occupied that part of the building on Wednesday evening, they were not fit to stand.

But the transparent thinness of this plea that the inappropriate saltatorial exercise was the fault, appears in the light of the fact that the cracking of the ceiling and the apparant yielding of the wall was observed early in the day, and even then caused apprehension. The attention of Mr. VAN ARSDALE, from whom the premises had been rented, was invited to these symptoms of collapse, and he cast his eye over them in a cursory way and gave assurance that there was nothing to be alarmed at. The walls were safe, the roof was safe, everything was safe, in fact, and nothing was said about the peril of dancing. One of the firm of contractors directed his glance at the premises, and saw nothing the matter. The crack was nothing, the wall remained plumb, and there was no sort of danger. Mr. DUDLEY complains that inspection was not invited from his department as well as from the interested parties. It is a pity that it was not, for then we should probably know what we can now only suspect, that the examination would have been as perfunctory as that which discovered no flaw when the work was new, and there would have been yet another assurance that it was all right. Yet it was not all right, and those who from first to last treated the matter with so much indifference are sharers in the awful crime of manslaughter. The wood-work was certainly defective, and the masonry was probably so, and the attempt to throw the blame on the "light, fantastic toe" is ridiculous. It is not for us, at the present moment, to endeavor to fix the responsibility, but we are sure that somebody is responsible and criminally to blame, and investigation should be set on foot, which shall result in a severe penalty. Nothing else will induce that care in the construction of such buildings, and give to official inspection that value which the public has a right to exact.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI.

Lord BEACONSFIELD steps down and out. At his advanced age it is not probable that he will ever again hold the reins of power. It is now fifty-four years since, as DISRAELI the younger, he published "Vivian Grey," and awoke to find himself famous. At any rate, he was very much talked about. His opinions, like his dress, were fantastic and outré. He was an eccentric character. "The Voyage of Captain Pompanilla," "The Wondrous Tale of Alroy," and "Contarini Fleming," followed "Vivian Grey" in rapid succession, and, at the age of 27, the son of an obscure Jewish literary man had made a distinct mark in the world. Admitted only on that plane of society where the people "stepping up meet the people stepping down," he had none of the advantages of powerful patronage and influence, while his name and race placed an almost insurmountable barrier between him and the people he was destined to govern. Born to a comfortable competency, he had no thought of becoming a book-seller's hack, or of remaining an articled clerk to a firm of attorneys. The motto which he placed on the title-page of "Vivian Grey"—"Why, then, the world's mine oyster, which I with sword will open," furnishes the key to his ambition and subsequent career. After many failures, which never disheartened him, he was elected to Parliament in 1837, as member from Maidstone. His first effort in debate was a dismal failure. Sensational and theatrical in manner, and much too bizarre and classical in matter, his speech was received by "the greatest debating society in the world" with shouts of derisive laughter and ironical cheers. Thoroughly sat down upon, the orator resumed his seat, muttering the well-known threat and prophecy, "The time will come when you will hear me." How true were those words, and how well this prediction has been fulfilled, is known to all English-speaking people. But the brilliant master of invective, epigram, wit, and satire made his way through difficulties which would have discouraged almost any other public man of whom we have any account. His birth and blood placed him under a social ban. Sir ROBERT PEEL, the popular Premier, who "played upon the House of Commons like an old fiddle," persistently suppressed him; but he would not be kept down, and the great Tory statesman himself at length yielded to the merciless satire and deadly ridicule with which his brilliant antagonist bombarded him.

At the beginning of his public career, Lord MELBOURNE asked him what was his idea in entering Parliament? what was his ambition? "To be Prime Minister of England," was the reply. Slowly, but surely, and with dogged pertinacity, and with a temper which no slights or sneers could ruffle, he reached the highest position that has ever been held by a British subject. His first term of office as Prime Minister was brief. The Liberals swept the country in 1868, and Mr. GLADSTONE took up the seals of office which his now famous antagonist had just laid down, after holding place for a little more than a year. Once more in opposition and minority, DISRAELI resumed the leadership of the Tory Party in the House of Commons. It appeared as if he were doomed to serve long as "Minister of the Exterior." But, little by little, the Liberal Premier's majority wasted away under the persistent and resolute attacks of his adversary, and, early in the Spring of 1874, DISRAELI was again summoned to Windsor. The insignia of office which he then assumed he has just laid aside.

The ability of the new Premier to administer the Government was to be put to the severest test. His opponents confidently predicted failure. It is easier, said they, to attack than to frame a policy; easier to criticise than to create. Just at this juncture, the never-settled, ever-recurring Eastern question began again to vex the cabinets of Europe. This gave DISRAELI an opportunity to show whatever power of statesmanship he possessed. He was fitted by nature and temperament to deal with the problem. Of Semitic origin, his ideas, methods, and sentiments bore an Oriental stamp. To make England great and respected by means of her Indian Empire was to him a natural and feasible policy. She had receded to the lowest place among the great military powers of Europe. It is doubtful if she could have equipped, for any offensive purpose an army of 150,000 men from her home resources. Compared with the great Continental armies, this was only a nucleus.

Let us note the bold and successful steps by which DISRAELI again placed England in the front rank among the nations. Without consulting Parliament, he purchased control of the Suez Canal. There was much adverse criticism, but Frenchmen held the key to England's Indian possessions, and it was important to buy it as cheaply and quickly as possible. Then the Prince of Wales was sent upon an Oriental tour. It was a triumphal march, and greatly stimulated Indian loyalty to the home Government. The Queen's Titles bill was next brought forward, and carried through Parliament. The Minister, by this stroke, secured the royal favor. There are people who say this is not worth much, but the good will of the sovereign is worth more than the ill-will. Meanwhile, the Czar had declared war against the Porte. In entering upon the contest, he solemnly asseverated that he did not wage war for conquest, but to redress the wrongs of the Christian subjects of the Sultan. There could be no doubt as to the result of the contest. Turkey could not stand single-handed against the great Northern power. Constantinople was threatened. The Czar seemed upon the point of abandoning his promise not to make war for territorial acquisition, now that his dream of a Winter Palace on the Bosphorus was likely to be realized. DISRAELI's Eastern policy now developed itself. British iron-clads were ordered into the Sea of Marmora, and 20,000 Sepoy troops were thrown into Malta. He said to Russia, "Hitherto shalt thou come and no further." The effect was startling. DISRAELI showed to Europe that England dared to trust her Eastern subjects to fight for her. BISMARCK, who had seemed to take but little interest in the fight, was suddenly on the alert. England, with millions of money and millions of men, was again a first-class power in European politics. The German Chancellor considered that there might better be a conference to discuss these new complications. It was called at Berlin, and in that distinguished muster of diplomatic talent Lord BEACONSFIELD was a conspicuous figure. It may not be said of him that he was that great and good Premier who ruled Britain prudently and safely, but it will be said of him that he was the bold, sagacious, and brilliant Minister who restored his country to the front rank among the great powers of Europe.

THAT ATROCIOUS WHITTAKER.

The infamous conduct of Cadet WHITTAKER in undergoing a brutal assault has naturally greatly exasperated the West Point authorities. Although every effort is making to secure the punishment of the offender, Gen. SCHOFIELD has been unable to restrain his feelings until the end of the trial. On Wednesday last he issued a general order, assuring the Cadets of "his unshaken faith in their honor and integrity, and of his appreciation of their manly bearing under the grievous wrong and injustice which they have recently suffered." The "grievous wrong" in question was the conduct of the atrocious WHITTAKER in connection with his ears, and Gen. SCHOFIELD properly characterizes it as "an outrage upon the corps." The wretched WHITTAKER has had the effrontery to pretend that the cutting of his personal ears was an outrage on himself, but Gen. SCHOFIELD, putting WHITTAKER's view of the matter aside as unworthy of consideration, is filled with sympathy for the unfortunate white Cadets who have been outraged by the impertinent liberty taken by the colored boy who has stained the floor of the West Point barracks with his African blood. So full of sympathy is Gen. SCHOFIELD that he has, "as an expression of his appreciation of their character and conduct," removed all the restrictions heretofore imposed by his orders upon the usual privileges of Cadets." Sustained by the sympathy and approval of the commanding officer, and rewarded by this removal of restrictions, the white Cadets ought to be able to bear up under the outrage to which they have been subjected. It was bad enough for WHITTAKER to have his ears cut, but had he been a little more reckless and wicked than he is, he might have tarred and feathered himself, ridden himself on a rail, and subsequently drowned himself, after the pattern set by the villain KELSEY at Huntington some years ago. In that case, the white Cadets would have suffered a more grievous wrong and a greater injustice than they have already suffered.

The mutilation of WHITTAKER is not the only outrage of which he has been guilty. The testimony of one of the Cadets shows that WHITTAKER has been for a long time in the habit of "falling in" next to a white Cadet. It is true, as the witness afterward admitted, that WHITTAKER had to "fall in" whether he wanted to or not, and it is apparent that he could not possibly "fall in" without being next to a white Cadet. This, however, does not lessen the outrage which every white Cadet suffered when the "nigger" "fell in" by his side, and it is really wonderful that such insolence should have been so long endured with Christian fortitude and resignation.

The white Cadets have evidently tried their utmost to avoid any difficulty with their obnoxious colored comrade. They have refused to have anything to do with him, and have treated him with the silent contempt due to a Cadet who has no more sense of decency than to be a "nigger." Gen. SCHOFIELD expresses the warmest appreciation of their "conduct," and there is no reason to doubt that, could he have his own way, there would be no possibility of a conflict of races at West Point.

It has been suggested that if the United States Government intends that the West Point Academy should be open to colored boys, more than one colored Cadet should be appointed at a time. There would then be less danger that the white Cadets would be subjected to an outrage like the recent one. It is easy for an isolated colored Cadet to be guilty of undergoing mutilation, but a dozen colored Cadets could hardly combine to have their entire stock of ears slit. The present trouble at West Point would never have happened had WHITTAKER been subjected to the restraining influence of a number of comrades of his own color, and in justice to the white Cadets, and as the most efficient means of protecting them from outrages such as the one which Gen. SCHOFIELD deplores, a dozen colored Cadets should be immediately sent to West Point.

There is another step which ought to be taken without delay. The officers of the West Point Academy are, without exception, white. They feel this unpleasant truth very keenly, if we may judge by Gen. SCHOFIELD's recent general order. Who knows how soon the depraved WHITTAKER, in case of his acquittal, may inflict some fiendish outrage on the officers? For all we know, he may be capable of going to Gen. SCHOFIELD's quarters and there tying and gagging himself, and in that condition lashing his back with a raw hide, and otherwise conducting himself after the reprehensible manner of desperate negro slaves in the days of Southern slavery. Something should be done for the protection of the officers as well as the Cadets, and the appointment of, say, two colored Professors at West Point would probably meet the necessities of the case. Gen. SCHOFIELD and his brother white officers would doubtless welcome the colored Professors as warmly as they welcomed the colored Cadet, and would show them the same sympathy and protection which they have shown to WHITTAKER. This is a matter on which procrastination is inexcusable. Gen. SCHOFIELD has publicly bewailed the outrage on the white Cadets, due solely to the fact that only one colored Cadet is now at West Point. There is not a single colored officer at the Academy, and unless colored Professors are appointed at once, we may hear of some terrible outrage on Gen. SCHOFIELD and his brother officers.

During the now almost forgotten civil war, a gallant Massachusetts officer fell at the head of his brave black regiment while storming Fort Wagner. The rebels, with withering sarcasm, afterward announced that they had "buried him under his niggers." It would be interesting to know what West Point thinks of Col. SHAW. What Col. SHAW, had he lived, would have thought of Gen. SCHOFIELD and the West Point Cadets can be readily imagined.

Among the dozen most important and eagerly-listened to members of the House of Commons to-day is Sir WILLIAM VERNON-HARCOURT—"Historicus"—who will now be, in all probability, a Cabinet Minister, and who intends, before his career concludes, to be among the half dozen. Time has softened the asperities of Sir WILLIAM's temper, but 20 years ago he was exceedingly unpopular, and a story is afloat that three well-known men had agreed to ask the best-hated man in London to dinner. When the time came, two arrived unaccompanied, and it then appeared that all had asked HARCOURT, who was there in response to the first invitation. But this is a rehash of a much older story, and arose from three of the lights of Almack's agreeing that they would each invite to their house the greatest bore they knew. The name was not to be mentioned, and each lady averred that she knew a bore who would far outbore all others. About this date Mr. VERNON HARCOURT, uncle of "Historicus," was excessively elated by being invited to dinner by Lady JERSEY, Lady LONDONDERRY, and a third celebrity, and telling various friends how wondrously splendid he was, the murder was out. It was of this worthy gentleman, in his youth, that Lord LYNDHURST observed that "young VERNON HARCOURT had cured him forever of a taste for clever boys." Sir WILLIAM is quite the reverse of a bore. His unpopularity was due to unwelcome utterances and lack of courtesy in demeanor, but he has greatly improved in such matters. In the event of the Liberals returning to office, he must have a high place. He is an intimate personal friend of Lord BEACONSFIELD, albeit his bitter political foe. Lady HARCOURT is a daughter of Mr. MOZLEY, the historian.

Suits at law are brought nowadays for every reason, and no reason, especially in some of the new States, whose inhabitants are often of a very litigious disposition. Recently a resident of Crete, Neb., was arrested for non-payment of a bill long due for groceries, while he was courting a young woman in her father's parlor. He was held to bail, and when he appeared in court to defend himself, the Judge promptly discharged him, declaring that he had been arrested without adequate cause. He has, in consequence, brought suit against his creditors, who had had the legal process served on him, and he claims $25,000 damages. He had, he alleges, borne a good financial reputation, which is now seriously affected; he has been disgraced by his arrest in the parlor of his sweetheart, injured socially and morally, and on account of what had happened then and there, he has never had the courage to visit his lady-love since, and considers his connubial prospects, so far as she is concerned, forever blighted. He thinks that $25,000 would be a moderate sum for the shock to his sensibilities and the harm to his good name, and avers that he will have justice, if there be justice in the land. It is possible that his arrest may have saved him from an unhappy marriage, but he flatly refuses to look at this side of the question.

Buying diamonds for retail is said to be a delicate and difficult task. The buyer sits down at a table with a large sheet of white paper spread before him. On the paper are poured the contents of certain packages received by the wholesale dealer. The keen eye of the buyer, an expert, of course, picks out at once the shallow, flawed, and all defective stones, which are definitely rejected, and swept into a bag. The accepted stones must next be paired, and to this end a tin plate, mounted on four feet, and pierced with holes of different size, is employed. On this the diamonds are laid, and shifted to and fro till each diamond has been fitted into a proportionate hole. Then the gems undergo a second and final examination, the buyer examining them most rigorously, and rejecting some which may at first have escaped his attention. Any irregularity of form, lack of brilliancy, dullness of water, or yellowness of tint is sufficient to condemn them. The matched stones are then put up in pairs in papers or small cases, and the others are sold to inferior jewelers. In Paris, the latter are readily purchased and set in the flowers, stars, crosses, and other ornaments which make such a display in the windows of the Palais Royal. The French, as a rule, like showy things, and are less fastidious in diamonds than we Americans are. They care more for general effect than purity or perfection, and often sell to our people inferior gems which will not bear resetting. Paris is not a good place to buy diamonds.

ADOLPHUS ERIC NORDENSKJOLD was born on the 18th of November, 1832, HARTMANN being the name of his mother's family, and his ancestors on his father's side being frequently distinguished men. He studied at the University of Borgo, but did not graduate there, as the flogging of two of the students seemed such an indignity to him as one of their number that he left, and in 1849 matriculated at Helsingfor. There he graduated in 1853 with signal credit, being placed first in all his examinations. He was soon appointed Director of the Faculty of Mathematics and Physics, but in 1858 he was cashiered for political reasons, and thereupon left the country. Returning in 1858, however, he obtained his degree of Master of Arts and Doctor, and was chosen to head a Government exploring expedition. But he again got into political trouble, was deprived of his civil rights, and obliged to fly from the country a second time. No objection was offered to his return in 1868, but when he was appointed State Mineralogist at Stockholm, difficulties arose about his passport. Finally, it was given to him with a warning that he should never return to Finland, and the Russian Minister at Stockholm was directed not to affix a visé to his passport should he contemplate doing so. In 1869 this order was revoked, and since then he has been a visitor at will to his native land, and in 1867 married Countess ANNA MANNERHEIM, a Finnish lady of high rank. He then became desirous of establishing himself at Helsingfor, and received the unanimous support of the Academic Council for the Chair of Mineralogy and Geology, but the Government defeated his nomination because he would not pledge himself not to take any part in Finnish politics. Thereupon, he obtained letters of naturalization as a Swedish subject. He was a member of the Chamber of Nobles during the last two Assemblies of the Swedish States, and from 1869 to 1871 was a Liberal member for Stockholm. What has happened to him since then is part of the history of Arctic exploration. His figure is about middle height, his head is almost square and high, his nose is straight and aquiline, his hair is short, strong, and fawn-colored, or drab, and his complexion would be a German blonde if it had not absorbed the gold which ought to burnish his hair. His name means "Buckler of the North."

A recent opinion of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania will doubtless lead life insurance companies of other States, as well as those of that State, to look carefully into the printed formulas which constitute the contract between the insurer and the insured. The policy in litigation had been issued by the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New-York. In the application which had been signed by the person to whom the policy was issued were these words: The applicant "further declares that he is not now afflicted with any disease or disorder, and that he does not now, nor will he, practice any pernicious habit that obviously tends to the shortening of life," and that the violation of this pledge several years after the policy was issued nullified the contract between the insurer and the insured. The lower court took this view of the law, and decided in favor of the company. This decision is now reversed by the Supreme Court, which orders judgment for the full amount of the policy, $1,500, with interest, to be entered in favor of the plaintiff. The court said that, as the insured had not made any false representations of existing facts in his application for insurance, the controlling question was whether his declaration as to his future intention and his failure to carry out that intention were sufficient to work a forfeiture of the policy. This question was answered in the negative. The court held that in no part of the application had the insured covenanted, promised, agreed, or warranted not to practice any pernicious habit. He declared that he would not; but the legal effect of a declaration is very different from that of a covenant or agreement. Nor was there any clause in the policy providing that, if the insured should do anything to shorten life, the policy should, ipso facto, become void. The stipulation that the policy should be null if any of the statements or declarations made in the application should be found untrue, "evidently referred," said the court, "to a state of things existing at the time the policy was issued." But as to these matters there was no misrepresentation.

The charm of the human voice, especially when expressed in song, is very great, not only on the ear, but often on the heart. How many men have fallen deeply in love with lyric artists who had no other allurement than their power of song. Among the brilliant singers who have sung to their great personal and consultial advantage is Mme. BERNEDINA, formerly prima donna of the Imperial Opera at Vienna. She early enrolled among her admirers Herr GOMPERS, a very rich banker; he went to hear her night after night, and finally lost, as women are said to do, his heart through his ears. He formally proposed for her hand, and ardently pressed his suit. She replied: "But I do not love you." "You may not now," was his response, "but I count my income by tens of thousands of florins." He evidently understood lyric artists. The last argument was conclusive. They were married. She now wears her name Mme. GOMPERS-BERNEDINA, and she (Vienna speak of him no longer as GOMPERS the banker, but as Herr GOMPERS-BERNEDINA, and so much to his annoyance that the best notes of his wife's voice are sometimes required to console him. The Madame never appears in public now, except when an entertainment is given for charity and Lent is confective, as has lately been the case in the Austrian capital. Herr GOMPERS deserved praise for his intrepidity. A man must be extremely courageous to marry any prima donna. She may be in private amiable, even-tempered, domestic; but the chances are so much against that desirable condition that the risk is enough to shake the stoutest soul.

AMUSEMENTS.

GENERAL MENTION.

Mr. Locke, the author of "Widow Bedott," has written a new five-act comedy called "Quartz Valley."

Miss Kate Girard and her company will follow the Weathersby-Goodwin Pinafore at the Standard Theatre.

Miss Minnie Palmer and her company will begin an engagement, to last six weeks, at the San Francisco Opera-house on May 3.

Lotta will have a benefit at the Park Theatre to-night, and will appear as Zip. To-morrow afternoon she will play in "The Little Detective."

"Hearts of Oak" will be withdrawn from the stage of the Fifth-Avenue Theatre after to-morrow night, and Mr. J. B. Polk will come forward in "A Gentleman from Nevada" on Monday evening.

It is said that Mr. William Terriss, who is one of the best of the young English actors, and who was to have filled the place of leading man at Wallack's Theatre next season, will not come to this country after all.

Herrmann, the magician, will make his appearance at Haverly's Theatre on the evening of May 3. On the same night a new company of French "specialty" performers, four in number, and known as "The Orloffes," will be seen there for the first time.

One of the most interesting features of Miss Neilson's coming engagement at Booth's Theatre will be the production of "Measure for Measure," which has not been played here, we believe, for over half a century. When Miss Neilson revived it in London, it had not been seen there for a quarter of a century.

The last representation of "Macbeth" will be given at Booth's Theatre to-night, with Mr. Booth and Mrs. Bowers in the chief parts. To-morrow afternoon "Ruy Blas" will be played for the first time this season. Mr. Booth's farewell appearance will be made to-morrow evening in "The Fool's Revenge."

The fifth entertainment in Mr. Vale's popular series was given at Chickering Hall last night, and introduced to our public the "Chatterton-Bohrer New Grand Concert Combination." Next Monday evening the series will be closed with a performance of "H. M. S. Pinafore," by the Miniature Opera Company.

At Chickering Hall, yesterday afternoon, beginning at 3:30 P. M., Mr. and Miss Sydney gave the first of their "Drawing-room Entertainments;" it was a bright and pleasing performance, composed of two comedietas, two recitations, and a monologue. It will be repeated at the same time and place next Thursday afternoon.

Mr. Haverly will manage the Fifth-Avenue Theatre next season on a somewhat curious plan. Every star engaged by him to play for a certain time there must also agree to play during the same season at his cheap down-town theatre, Niblo's. Thus he will control the movements in this City of several popular actors and actresses, who have heretofore been seen at other houses. This is shrewd management, if not high art.

Tom Thumb and his diminutive company are now safely lodged at the Aquarium, where, as usual, they attract a good deal of public attention. Those who saw the General in earlier and happier years should be glad to renew their acquaintance with him now. His company includes his wife, Major Newell, and two or three pretty little fairies, and the entertainment given by them has some of the merit of novelty. Two performances are announced for each day.

Miss Kate Field will repeat "Eyes and Ears in London" for the last time to-morrow evening at Chickering Hall, and the profits of the entertainment will be added to the Shakespeare memorial fund—a cause in which Miss Field has been for a long time past earnestly interested. To-morrow, it may be recalled, will mark the beginning of a series of performances at the theatre at Stratford-on-Avon, the purpose of which is identified with Miss Field's. Next week Miss Field will appear in Baltimore under the management of Mr. H. J. Sargent.

"The Way We Live" will be only played during the remainder of this week at Daly's Theatre and on next Monday and Tuesday evenings. The coming week will be the last week of the regular season there, and will be signalized by several reproductions. "The Royal Middy" will be performed on Wednesday and Thursday, and "An Arabian Night" on Friday and Saturday. These pieces will be revived with the original casts, including Miss Catherine Lewis. Mr. John Hart, a well-known negro comedian, has been engaged to take Mr. Bennett's place as Mungo in "The Royal Middy."

CAMPANINI'S THANKS.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The greatest satisfaction ever offered to the heart of an artist is to find that friends, fellow-artists, and the public are willing to second his efforts, volunteer their services, and take a great interest in a charitable purpose which he undertakes. I am happy to state that I felt this pleasure in the highest degree on the occasion of the concert given last Monday at Steinway Hall for the benefit of the Italian School of Leonard-street.

Now, I beg of you to allow me to express, through the columns of your valuable paper, my gratitude to the press of this great Metropolis for the advantage offered me by its immense publicity, to the distinguished artists, amateurs, and Professors who took part in the concert; to Messrs. Steinway for the generous offer of their hall, and, finally, to my friends and patrons of this City who so kindly responded to my invitation. Allow me, dear Sir, to express the same warm thanks on the part, also, of the poor children of our school so generously benefited by the large proceeds of the concert, and on the part of the entire Italian colony resident in New-York. With the best regards to you, I remain respectfully yours, ITALO CAMPANINI.

PASSING THE ARMY BILL WITH ITS POLITICAL RIDER.

THE SENATE AGREES TO THE MEASURE WITHOUT AMENDING IT—MESSRS. BLAINE, CONKLING, EDMUNDS, AND KIRKWOOD, PRESENT THE REPUBLICAN SIDE OF THE CASE.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—The Army Appropriation bill, with its rider, was passed in the Senate to-day, by a strict party vote, without amendment, and as it came from the House. When the rider, which provides that none of the money appropriated shall be used for the payment or transportation of any part of the Army to be used as a police force at the polls, was reached, Mr. Blaine offered an amendment imposing a heavy fine upon any person who shall carry weapons, open or concealed, at the polls, except under United States authority. This was ruled out of order. Some time afterward he submitted the same amendment in a different form. This met the fate of its predecessor, but Mr. Blaine took occasion to say that his object was to prevent the intimidation of voters in the South by the gathering of armed mobs at the polls. If the weapons of the United States were to be excluded, those of private individuals should not be brought to the voting-places. Mr. Eaton advised him to confine his efforts to Maine, and was informed that Maine was a loyal State which obeyed the laws. Mr. Kirkwood offered an amendment to the effect that the rider should not prevent the use of troops when they were needed to enforce the execution of any United States law, by the President, against violent resistance, and made a forcible presentation of his objections to the obnoxious legislation attached to the bill.

Mr. Conkling arraigned the Democratic Party for its preventing the Government from checking riots and fraud on one day in the year, while allowing the laws to be enforced on every other day. Mr. Eaton, he said, would not support such a law if he were not a Democrat, but being one, he regarded it as complacently as Nero—that distinguished Democrat—regarded the destruction of Rome. Mr. Eaton contended that Nero was a Republican, a thrifty farmer, and an imperialist. Mr. Conkling maintained that Nero was emphatically a one-termer, and asserted that the rider would be worth a great deal to the Democrats at the next election, but not because it would aid in securing an honest vote or a true return.

Mr. Kirkwood's amendment was rejected, and then Mr. Edmunds offered a series of four, all of which were defeated by strict party votes. These amendments were of the same general character, and they provided that the rider should not apply in cases in which the Constitution and existing laws authorize the President to use the military power to enforce the execution of the laws. The yeas and nays were called on each amendment. The Democrats refrained from making any reply to the objections urged by the Republicans, except when Mr. Eaton occasionally interposed a word or two from his seat.

DELAYING REFORM IN THE TARIFF.

NO ACTION YET TAKEN BY THE WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE—ITS IMPRACTICAL MEMBERS.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—The Committee on Ways and Means last week appointed a sub-committee, to whom was referred all matters pertaining to the tariff pending before the committee, with instructions to report in whole or in part at the meeting to-day. This resolution was presented by Mr. Carlisle, and the instructions were so worded as to secure some kind of a report at to-day's meeting. The sub-committee consists of Messrs. Carlisle, Tucker, Mills, Garfield, and Dunnell, and it was believed that the three gentlemen first named, being earnest in their desire to secure reform in the present complex tariff system, would certainly report to-day, in whole or in part, a measure upon which the full committee could act. Knowing the difficulty and delay which attend the preparation of a Revenue bill including a variety of articles, the instructions to the sub-committee were purposely so worded as to authorize a report to be made on any one of the subjects relating to tariff now pending before the committee. So far from having prepared to report anything to-day, the sub-committee have not even had a meeting. Messrs. Carlisle, Tucker, and Mills, the Democratic members, have had several consultations for the purpose of agreeing upon a line of action to be pursued, but there has been no meeting of the sub-committee, and nothing practical has been done toward formulating a tariff measure. Nothing, therefore, could be done to-day by the full committee, and after referring the question of modifying the duties on sugar to the sub-committee, and increasing its number by adding Messrs. Gibson and Frye, the entire matter was passed over.

The action of the Committee on Ways and Means from the very beginning of the session shows that they are an eminently impractical body, and nothing can be expected to result from their labors. With a majority favorable to tariff reform, the committee cannot be brought to report any measure whatever, and instead of taking up one of the subjects before them, like paper, wood pulp, or salt, they spend time in profitless wrangles over the entire tariff list. The tariff reform members of the committee want to revise the whole tariff system at a single stroke, and persist in this impracticable policy in the face of the signal failures of similar efforts in previous Congresses, and in view of the fact that the high protection members are encouraging them to pursue this very line of conduct. In short, the protectionists, in consequence of the weakness or stupidity of their opponents, are managing the committee, and unless the majority will abandon their blundering methods and use their numerical strength to perfect and report to the House some one of the more simple and comprehensive measures pending before the committee, the country will not obtain, during the present session of Congress, that measure of relief so earnestly desired.

As a few minutes before noon the Hoop-iron bill was taken up by the committee in order to permit Mr. Gibson, who was absent from the meeting of last week, to record his vote. The pending motion was to make the duty on band, hoop, and scroll iron 35 per cent ad valorem, upon which there was a tie vote last Thursday. Mr. Gibson voted to-day for the motion, which carried it by one majority. The friends of the reduction in the rate of duty thought Mr. Gibson's vote settled the matter, but Mr. Conger called attention to the fact that the motion to fix the rate at 35 per cent was in the form of an amendment to the bill, and that the question upon the bill as amended was yet to be voted on. Mr. Conger consumed the time until 12 o'clock talking on this parliamentary question, and then demanded that the committee should adjourn, as the rules forbid committees to sit during the session of the House. This demand had to be complied with.

THE DESK ON WHICH JEFFERSON WROTE THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE ACCEPTED BY CONGRESS.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—A little mahogany writing-desk, about 18 inches long, 12 inches wide, and 5 inches deep, upon which the Declaration of Independence was written by Thomas Jefferson, was presented to the United States to-day by the children of the late Joseph Coolidge, Jr., of Massachusetts, who married Mr. Jefferson's granddaughter, and to whom the desk was given by Mr. Jefferson. The desk bears an appropriate inscription, which was placed upon it by Mr. Jefferson. It was recently brought to this city by the Hon. Robert C. Winthrop, of Massachusetts, and it was sent to Congress to-day, accompanied by a message written by the President. In the House, short addresses were made by Mr. Crapo, of Massachusetts, and Mr. Tucker, of Virginia, previous to the passage of resolutions thanking the donors, and directing the preservation of the desk in the State Department. The desk was then sent to the Senate, where the resolutions were passed, after addresses had been delivered by Mr. Dawes, of Massachusetts, and Mr. Johnston, of Virginia. Among those who were in the gallery were Sir Edward Thornton, the British Minister; Secretary Evarts, and Mr. Hayes. The resolutions say that the relic is accepted "in the name of the nation," and in the Senate Mr. Beck preserved his consistency by suggesting that for the word "nation" should be substituted the words, "United States of America." A joint resolution expressing the thanks of Congress to the donors, was passed unanimously by both Houses.

WEST POINT'S CUSTER STATUE.

MRS. CUSTER CRITICISES THE WORK AND PROTESTS AGAINST DUPLICATING IT IN WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—A bill was recently introduced in the House for the erection in this city of a monument to the memory of Gen. Custer and the officers and men of the Seventh United States Cavalry who were killed by the Sitting Bull band of Indians in the fight on the Little Big Horn River. The bill directs the Secretary of War to contract with Wilson McDonald, of New-York, for the erection of the monument, "which shall include duplicates of the sculptor's equestrian and pedestrian figures of the late Gen. Custer, and also the likenesses of the principal officers and the names of the men who were killed in the battle of Little Big Horn." It seems that the widow of Gen. Custer is not satisfied with the statue of her husband erected at the West Point Military Academy by Wilson McDonald, and in a letter protesting against the passage of the bill now pending says that McDonald, in erecting the West Point statue, did not consult her or any friends of her late husband. Mrs. Custer does not object to the erection of a statue in Washington, but protests against employing Mr. McDonald as the sculptor. Commenting on the Custer monument at West Point, Mrs. Custer says in a letter to Representative Daggett, of Nevada: "The statue could not be worse than it is. The face is of a man of 60, and the dress so unmilitary that his brother-officers shudder in looking at it. He is represented with full-dress coat and top boots, that only belong to undress uniform. The whole costume is incongruous and incorrect. Then, he is armed, like a desperado, in both hands, while some of the General's best charges were made with no fire-arms about him. I realize that I am the last one on earth to be satisfied with any representation of my husband. Nothing could portray to me in any form, my idea of him. But his friends in civic life, his comrades in the Army, and artists, all have but one story to tell—that the statue is a failure as a likeness, as the representation of a soldier and as a work of art. You know what intense individuality Gen. Custer had. His quick movements, his active step, his riding, the very way he wore his clothes, were so totally unlike any one else, he could not fail to be well represented if a man of genius once tried to represent him. It seems as if I could not endure the thought of this wretched statue being repeated, and I hope that your voice may influence those upon whom the decision rests."

THE WRONGS OF THE BLACKS.

WHAT THEY COMPLAIN OF IN TEXAS—AN UNJUST CRIMINAL LAW.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—The Senate Exodus Committee resumed the examination of witnesses to-day. Horatio Ruby, a colored man, who, until recently was a resident of Burleson County, Texas, testified that he had emigrated to Kansas several months ago. He said the reasons for the blacks leaving Texas were to be found in the lack of educational facilities for their children and obnoxious laws upon the statute-books of the State, which were prejudicial to the rights of colored men. He complained of the severity of penalties for minor offenses in his section, and criticised the prevailing system of hiring out county convicts. He said culprits who are convicted of minor offenses before county criminal courts are hired out to planters at nominal prices. He knew of one instance—an extreme case—where a colored woman, found guilty of petit larceny and fined $30 and costs, was hired out to a planter at one-quarter of a cent per day. The law, he said, leaves it to the discretion of the Judge to determine the compensation which shall be agreed upon for the services of these county convicts. The main grievance, he said, which colored people in Texas complain of is the poor educational facilities afforded to their children. In the country, and except in large cities, the average school season does not exceed three months in a year. He admitted that under the laws of the State black children had the same facilities as the white children, but what the witness and other colored people in Texas complained of was not discrimination, but the insufficiency of school facilities for both blacks and whites. Mr. Ruby said there existed in some sections of Texas a strong prejudice on the part of some Democrats—mostly political leaders—against Republicans, black and white, especially if these Republicans are intelligent men and men of influence, and that this prejudice frequently exhibited itself in outrages and murders. The witness said another grievance the colored people complained of was the insecurity of colored women from the insults of white men. Decent colored women were sometimes insulted on the streets by white men, with such remarks as "Hello, Sally!" This, of course, was a trivial offense, but the witness thought if any colored man should pass such remarks to white women there would soon be a funeral of a negro in that locality.

AN "ARGUMENT" IN BLANK VERSE

DELEGATE DOWNEY HAS PRINTED IN THE "CONGRESSIONAL RECORD" AND COPYRIGHTED A REMARKABLE POETICAL EFFUSION.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—The Congressional Record of to-day shows to what extremes may be carried the bad practice which prevails in the House of allowing members to print, with the account of the regular proceedings, speeches which are never delivered in the House or anywhere else. A few days ago Stephen W. Downey, Delegate from Wyoming Territory, introduced a very remarkable bill, which has been printed in THE TIMES. The preamble contained the Apostle's Creed, and asserted that the people of the United States firmly believed it to be true. The bill provided for the appropriation of $500,000, to be expended in representing upon the walls of the Capitol, in paintings, "The Birth, Life, Death, and Resurrection of our Saviour, Jesus Christ." On the following day Mr. Downey announced in the House that he had prepared "an argument in support of his bill," and sought permission to print it in the Record. Permission was given as usual in such cases. The "argument" appeared this morning in the shape of 2,600 lines of blank verse, covering the first 15 pages of the Record. This "argument" is entitled "The Immortals," is dedicated to Congress, and is copyrighted. It serves to present, upon the framework of a vision of the universe, a somewhat perplexing combination of moral teachings, allegorical pictures, and departed shades of mighty persons. Mr. Downey has very liberally used his knowledge of Homer, Vergil, Dante, Paradise Lost, and the Classical Dictionary, and has allowed himself to be led by a guardian angel named Phantasmagoria into all sorts of places. His lines are well constructed and pleasing to the ear. The profusion of his characters render his poetical olla podrida somewhat unintelligible at the first reading, and many readings will not reveal in the work an argument in support of his bill. There are grounds for the suspicion that the poet has availed himself of the unsuspecting liberality of the Government for securing, free of cost, the publication and wide gratuitous circulation of the offspring of his imaginative brain.

In the Senate this morning Mr. Morrill asked that the Committee on Printing should be instructed to exclude this effusion from the bound copy of the Record. Other Senators agreed with Mr. Morrill as to the propriety of such action, but held that the House should be allowed to settle the matter for itself. Mr. Hamlin condemned the practice under which such a publication can be made. "Leave to print" is not granted in the Senate. No action was taken because it was announced that the House had the case in hand.

In the House, Mr. Garfield moved that the poem be referred to the Committee on Rules for an inquiry as to the power to copyright it, and Mr. Downey asserted that the Librarian of Congress had told him that he had that power in a case of this kind. Mr. Garfield's motion was carried by a yea and nay vote of 119 to 105. The Record of to-day has already had a large sale as a curiosity. Mr. Downey is a native of Maryland, who went to Wyoming in 1869, where he has since practiced law. He is about 40 years old, and has held important offices in the Territory.

THE KELLOGG CONTROVERSY.

CONSIDERATION OF THE SUBJECT TO BEGIN TO-DAY—A LONG SPEECH BY BEN HILL EXPECTED.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—After the passage of the Army Appropriation bill in the Senate this afternoon, Mr. Saulsbury called up the resolutions of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in reference to the Kellogg-Spofford case. There was no debate, and the resolutions were taken up at once without a division, so that at 1:30 to-morrow the consideration of these resolutions will begin, probably with the long speech which has been prepared by Mr. Hill, of Georgia. Mr. Saulsbury had given notice early in the day that he would call up the resolutions after the passage of the Army bill, saying that the committee was unwilling to allow action upon them to be further delayed. At that time the Appropriations Committee made a fruitless attempt to induce him to permit the consideration of the bill repealing the permanent annual appropriations. The arguments made in the several caucuses held upon this case by the Democrats have shown that many of the Senators on Mr. Hill's side of the chamber regard the case as settled, and are opposed to reopening it. It is well known that some of the most prominent of them have expressed an intention to vote in favor of Mr. Kellogg when the time shall come, and several have not hesitated to make public their reasons for such a course. But the Republicans have received no official information concerning the existence of this conservative feeling, and they will, therefore, proceed as if Mr. Hill's report and the action of the committee represented the views of a united majority of the Senate. There are indications that the debate will be a very lively one. Mr. Hill has declared, in a letter published in a Southern newspaper, that the President and the Secretary of the Treasury have been concerned in a conspiracy with Mr. Kellogg to ruin him, and he may be asked to furnish proof of the truth of this statement.

NOTES FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, April 22, 1880.

The Treasury Department to-day purchased 163,000 ounces of fine silver for delivery at the Philadelphia and New-Orleans Mints.

The case of the Widow Oliver against ex-Senator Simon Cameron for $100,000 damages for breach of promise of marriage, is set for hearing in the Supreme Court of the District in General Term to-morrow, on appeal from the judgment for the defendant in the court below. As far as is known, neither of the parties to the suit is at present in the city.

The House to-day passed the Navy Appropriation bill, after which the Immediate Deficiency bill was taken up, and an understanding reached by which 1 hour and 20 minutes were allowed for general debate, the one hour to be given to the Republican side. Mr. Reed took the floor to speak against the Marshals clause, bringing forward and elaborating the points already outlined in THE TIMES's dispatch. He began his remarks at 4 o'clock, and as a recess was ordered at 4:30, Mr. Reed was required to discontinue his remarks until to-morrow.

A bill was introduced in the Senate to-day by Mr. Baldwin authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Detroit River. It provides that whenever authority is granted by Michigan and Canada to any persons or corporation they may construct the bridge under the following restrictions: It shall be at or within one mile of the City of Detroit, and may be used for railroad and highway purposes; it shall not interfere with the free navigation of the river beyond what is necessary to carry into full effect the rights and privileges granted in the bill, and the necessary detention of boats in passing the bridge is not to be construed as interfering with the navigation of the river. The bill provides that the structure shall have one or more pivot draws, with spans of not less than 200 feet in the clear on each side of the pivot-pier, and that the span or spans outside of the draws shall be at least 250 feet over the main channel of the river; also, that the bridge shall be at least 20 feet high above high-water mark. All railroad companies desiring to use the bridge shall be entitled to equal rights and privileges in passing over it, and in the use of its approaches and machinery, upon reasonable terms and conditions, which are to be prescribed by the District Court of the Eastern District of Michigan.

MR. M'GILL BALKED.

THE WIDOW LEWIS'S RELEASE AND RAPID RETREAT FROM NEW-JERSEY.

Sheriff Toffey, of Hudson County, yesterday received a letter from the Chief of Police of Trenton informing him that the bogus widow, Lewis, had escaped beyond the reach of the Hudson County authorities. Mrs. Lewis turned State's evidence against her fellow-conspirators, and District Attorney Keasbey promised her immunity. It is one of the rules of the United States court, at Trenton, in fact, that a prisoner who turns State's evidence earns his or her freedom. In the face of this usage, District Attorney McGill, of Hudson County, N. J., secured Mrs. Lewis's indictment for perjury. He notified District Attorney Keasbey of the indictment, and asked that the prisoner be released by the United States authorities; she be surrendered into the custody of the State authorities for trial. Mr. Keasbey evinced no disposition to comply with the demand, and Mr. McGill placed in Sheriff Toffey's hands a capias for the woman's arrest. The Chief of Police of Trenton was detailed by the Sheriff to keep his eye on the Trenton Jail, where Mrs. Lewis was imprisoned, and as soon as she stepped outside to take her into custody. Wednesday he saw the woman leave the jail in company with a man. When the Chief attempted to arrest her, the man said that he was a United States Marshal and that Mrs. Lewis was his prisoner. The Chief followed them to the State line, where his power to arrest terminated. He saw them pass over the border and then relinquished the chase.

In District Attorney McGill's office it is said that Mrs. Lewis was taken on Wednesday before the Grand Jury, and then carried away through a back door, and that upon reaching the Pennsylvania line she was given her freedom. In others quarters it is suspected that she was taken out of the State on a writ, in order to remove her from the surveillance of the State authorities. So far as appears, she has never been sentenced in the United States courts, though an application for her pardon has been made to the President by the United States court officers.

THE OLD GUARD'S ANNIVERSARY.

The fifty-eighth anniversary of the formation of the Old Guard occurred yesterday, and it was the intention of its members to celebrate the occasion by an entertainment. Invitations had been extended to several other veteran organizations to be present, among them the "State Fencibles," of Philadelphia, and the "Citizens Corps," of Troy. Both these companies replied that, as they were coming to this City on Decoration Day, they could not visit the City yesterday. On this account the proposed entertainment was postponed until May 31. The "State Fencibles" will reach this City Sunday morning May 30, and will be escorted to their hotel by a detachment from the Old Guard. The Troy Citizens Corps will arrive here on the morning of the Decoration Day, and the three organizations will parade with the First Brigade, First Division, as the "Red, White and Blue" Corps, the uniform of the Troy Corps being red; that of the Old Guard white, and that of the "State Fencibles" blue. In the evening the visiting corps will be entertained by the Old Guard at dinner, in its new club-room, Fifth-avenue and Fourteenth-street. The club-room has been elegantly fitted up, and a conspicuous decoration is a collection of ancient mustkoms of war, arranged on a dark field, presented by Col. McClure, of Tiffany & Co. They consist of a sword of the fourteenth century, a "morning star" and battle-axe of the sixteenth century, a halberd of the seventeenth century, the sword of the Duke of Savoy, and—as a central figure—a shield of honor, belonging to Francis I. of Naples, 1825.

THE MANHATTAN CLUB RECEPTION.

There was a large assemblage of notable gentlemen present last night at the reception of the Manhattan Club. The Board of Managers and officers of the club availed themselves of the fact that the Court of Appeals is now sitting in this City to invite the Judges to the reunion, and the result was that many distinguished men were in attendance. Among the most prominent were Chief-Justice Sandford E. Church and the elevated judges Danforth, Earl, Miller, and Rapallo, of the Court of Appeals; United States Senator Kernan; Judges Lawrence, Larned, Pratt, and Barrett, of the Supreme Court; Judges Curtis and Spain, of the Superior Court; City Judge Cowing; Judges Lawrence and Van Hoesen, of the Court of Common Pleas; Judge Sheridan, of the Marine Court; Judge Benedict, of the United States District Court; ex-Attorney-General Jeremiah Black, of Pennsylvania; Congressman O'Brien, ex-Judges John R. Parsons, District Attorney Phelps, ex-Attorney-General Noxon, ex-Comptroller William C. DeWitt, Corporation Counsel Beekman, ex-Mayor Hall, David Dudley Field, ex-Commissioner Charles F. MacLean, Henry L. Clinton, the Hon. John Bigelow, the Hon. Edwin W. Stoughton, Bernard Cassidy, Gen. H. W. Slocum, the Hon. Henry C. Murphy, Henry A. Crass, F. F. Marbury, Richard O'Gorman, Lawrence Turnure, Edwin Farrs, Douglas Taylor, Randolph W. Townsend, Aaron J. Vanderpoel, I. Wormser, Wilson G. Hunt, Don W. Dickinson, of Detroit; F. B. Wallace, of Pennsylvania; District Attorney Lounsbery, of Ulster County; R. O. Pertria, Clerk of the Court of Appeals; John T. Agnew, ex-Judge Palmer, and Alderman Charles H. Marshall. The evening was spent in the interchange of social courtesies. When the collation was spread, Senator Kernan took occasion to toast the health of Judge Black, who is to sail for Europe on Saturday next on a brief vacation for the benefit of his health.

SCHAEFER AGAIN VICTORIOUS.

SEXTON'S OPEN-TABLE BILLIARDS NO MATCH FOR THE NURSING GAME.

Jacob Schaefer, the billiard champion, last evening, in Tammany Hall, crossed cues with ex-Champion William Sexton for the Collender championship emblem and a money stake of $1,000. The emblem was first contested for in the tournament of January last, when the new "champions' game," in which unrestricted ball-nursing is barred by a "balk-line," was first introduced to the public, and was won by Sexton. Schaefer, who took third prize, challenged Sexton, and in a game played in February carried off the trophy. Sexton challenged Schaefer, and the challenge being accepted, brought the two men together last evening.

Schaefer was the favorite with the betting men. The players both came in late, and were greeted with some applause. Mr. John Dury was chosen referee, and Mr. "Sam" Knight and Mr. L. Rice, umpires, respectively, for Sexton and Schaefer. The game was 600 points up, under the new rules. Sexton won the lead, selected the white ball, counted from the "lay-off," and at once began to display his wonderful skill at open-table play. He made shots from every conceivable position, amid frequent outbursts of applause. He scored, before he missed, 34 points. Schaefer responded with 18, and then, for probably the first time in the history of his professional playing, Sexton took off his frock coat. So unusual and unlooked for was this trivial circumstance that the spectators greeted it with loud plaudits. Sexton made but 5 in his shirt-sleeves. Schaefer opened his third inning with an awful "scratch" that made the spectators fairly groan, but he missed on his third shot.

Both men appeared nervous, and the scoring was, in consequence, meagre for several innings. Sexton woke up in the seventh inning, and sent the ivories spinning about until he had added 38 to his string, which stood 88 to Schaefer's 57. At this point the play became wretched on both sides, and Sexton was again the first to break the dull monotony of the game. With a run of 31, cut short by an unfortunate "miscue," he turned his first string, his score standing 118 to his adversary's 78.

Both men had now changed their cues, but Schaefer seemed still powerless to gain the rail, whereon he is deeply versed for effective play. His play was, indeed, so poor as to elicit whistles of surprise from the spectators, who were being entertained by the small but well-played runs of Sexton. At last, in the eighteenth inning, Schaefer managed to gather 26 carooms, and turned the string at 118, Sexton then being 150. Up to this point there had been no "rail" play at all, but in the twentieth inning Schaefer, for the first time "railed" the balls, and before he finished added 107 very prettily played carooms to his credit. This substantial work carried his score up to 225—23 ahead of his adversary. The run was liberally applauded. It did it seem to stir Sexton up to another effective display of skill, and in two very finely executed runs he turned his second string. The scores stood 218 to 227, with Schaefer leading by 9 points. Sexton, two innings later, buried this out of sight with a nicely-executed open-table run of 43. Schaefer missed, and then the spectators became fairly frantic over two splendid cushion-shots by his adversary.

The scores now stood: Sexton 263, Schaefer 254. There was more tumultuous applause as Schaefer turned the tide of battle again in his favor with a run of 112. Sexton, with a fine run of 81, turned his third string 23 behind the champion. He also "railed" the ivories at the outset of the succeeding inning and "nursed" them dolefully for 76, when he slipped up on an easy carom. He had gained a lead of nearly 50 and four innings later on he put to his credit an equally well-played run that netted 62. His score stood, at this point, 400 to Schaefer's 368. The champion made 15, and Sexton again got the little spheres on the rail, and rolled them along the cushion with skillful and delicate stroke, but lost his position, and failed to count on his thirteenth carom. Schaefer made 2, and then Sexton played 4, and attempted a "nurse." It missed the first ball, but "struck the second, and, rolling back, appeared to strike the ball it had at first missed. Instantly there was a tumult of applause and a call for the referee's decision. He declared "no count," and there was an outburst of hisses and hand-clapping. The Yankee retired, but in the next inning turned his fifth string at 508, nearly 90 ahead of the champion. The latter then gained the rail, and began some of his favorite nurse carooms, playing with easy grace and rapid stroke. He rolled up quickly and passed his adversary. He rolled up among the triple figures for the third time, amid loud and continued applause. He scored 141, and slipped up on a "kiss" shot, with a lead of 51. Ragged and uneven play succeeded, Sexton being perceptibly nettled and playing with angry vim. His face flushed and paled by turns, and it was plain that he was playing with despairing desperation. His nerve seemed shaken, and his one forgot its cunning. He made a few unsuccessful efforts to regain lost ground, but Schaefer rolled the spheres, made 31, and closed his score of 600.

It was good up-hill work for Schaefer, but his victory was largely due to his superiority at "nursing." He was surpassed by his opponent in open-table play, which is the truly scientific game. Sexton suffered considerably from what the players call "bad luck," the balls at times thwarting all his efforts to gain control of them. Appended is the complete score of the game:

Schaefer—18, 18, 2, 4, 3, 19, 5, 6, 0, 0, 1, 1, 3, 5, 0, 14, 0, 56, 0, 107, 2, 7, 0, 0, 112, 0, 1, 15, 0, 6, 17, 12, 2, 17, 141, 0, 2, 37, 0, 10—600.

Sexton—34, 5, 1, 2, 7, 0, 38, 1, 3, 1, 5, 0, 3, 21, 34, 7, 0, 1, 11, 1, 16, 40, 1, 43, 3, 12, 6, 31, 75, 3, 0, 3, 66, 39, 4, 16, 7, 0, 5, 2, 0—503.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

THE LEGAL RIGHTS OF THE COMPANY, AND THE EQUITABLE RIGHTS OF ITS STOCKHOLDERS—OPINION OF THE HON. JEREMIAH S. BLACK.

To the Honorable Robert M. McLane, Chairman of the Committee on Pacific Railroads, House of Representatives:

SIR: It became my duty a short time ago to look after the rights of the stockholders of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. I never had a body of clients whom I believed better entitled to my exertions, nor have I ever seen a cause which, in its nature and character, was more calculated to excite sympathy and interest in the minds of just men. I may be wrong, and I do not ask you to feel as I do, but the stockholders are threatened with a great injury, and you will pardon me for doing what I can to avert it.

I did not hear the oral address of Mr. Billings, the President of the company, but I have read the printed argument of Mr. Wilson, its counsel. The latter discusses the case with a completeness which leaves me but little to say except what is necessary to invoke your careful attention to the subject as he presents it. I do not expect you to see it with his eyes, but to use the light which he furnishes in order that you may see the better with your own. In the meantime, I beg you, and the other members of the committee, to reflect on the propositions following.

You cannot justly or lawfully invalidate the rights of the present stockholders on account of anything done or suffered by the original corporators.

Let it be assumed that Congress ought not to have made this land grant, or that they should have coupled the grant with more onerous conditions, or assume that the grantees did not perform their duties properly; yet, if the parties I represent innocently and in good faith invested their money in this enterprise, and did nothing but what the law invited them to do, you cannot now visit upon their heads the sins of a former Congress, or punish them for the defaults of the persons whom they legally dealt with. Nay, you cannot, without cruelty, refuse them all the aid in your power to protect them against any evil consequence technically resulting from the acts or omissions of others, for whom they were not morally, though legally, responsible. To let eight thousand innocent persons suffer great losses like these, when you have the power to relieve them, would be utterly without justification, unless the relief be refused on some strong ground of public interest or public policy. No such interest or policy can be said to intervene here; nor is it admitted, or even alleged, that anything has been done or omitted which can, by any legal construction, affect the rights of the stockholders unfavorably.

The question which you are now to consider is whether you will pass an act extending the time for finishing the railroad. Of course, it is not possible that it should be finished by the 4th of July next. The failure has been caused by misfortune. If there has been any guilt, it is not the guilt of the stockholders.

You are asked to give this extension merely to quiet their title, so that the lands may be sold and the proceeds used without the apprehension of a proceeding to forfeit them.

This relief is equitably due to the stockholders, and is only equivalent to what a Chancellor would decree if the United States were a suable party.

If you refuse to grant the extension, it will imply the opinion that the grant may be forfeited; and, perhaps, be construed as a threat to institute some proceeding or make some legislative order, for that purpose.

This would be a serious misfortune, for it would diminish the price of the stock, cripple the company, and postpone the completion of the road for years longer than would be necessary; and it would eventually leave the title of the lands just where it is now; for the grant is absolute, and the land is not liable to be forfeited. I take it for certain that you will not do this thing for the mere purpose of worrying eight thousand men, women, and children.

You will report in favor of extending the time, unless you see some reason for believing that a judicial proceeding to forfeit the grant ought to be successful, or that a legislative declaration of forfeiture could be legally and constitutionally carried into effect.

To say that the title vested by this grant is liable to forfeiture in any contingency, is to disregard all rules of interpretation. No member of this committee can be ignorant of the fact that judicial always leans with its whole weight against forfeitures. A forfeiture can never be enacted except under some provision of the grant which is expressed in words too plain to be misunderstood. A claim to take back an estate vested by the act of the claimant in another party, must be based upon unequivocal words of reservation, and the fact that the grantee has brought himself within the range of the prohibition must be proved by evidence perfectly clear, or else the claim fails. In a public or a private grant, clauses providing for forfeiture are construed strictly; for the rule which is not applied to any other kind of contract. The reasons upon which this rule is founded are so obvious that I need not enumerate them.

Now let us look and see if there is anything in this act of incorporation which declares that the land grant may be forfeited, or declared void, or resumed in any event.

In the first place, it will be observed that the grant is in verba de presenti—the title is vested in the company at the moment when the charter is accepted. Unless some other grant does not provide that the title is to be vested as the work goes on.

It gives it all at once; and when the road is made, patent may issue—not to create the title, but to confirm it. The forfeiture, therefore, the right of the company is now to be taken away, the thing must be done by forfeiting a title already vested, not by refusing to make a title where none existed.

The eighth section declares that the grant shall be held upon conditions, &c. One condition being the completion of the road within a certain time, afterward extended. This I admit would, if there were nothing more, make the estate conditional, and the grantor might exact a forfeiture for condition broken.

But there is something more. The ninth section prescribes what the penalty shall be for a breach of the condition, and that penalty is not forfeiture. In case of such breach the right is reserved to do what may be necessary to insure the speedy completion of the road, at the expense of the contract. This is the only thing that the United States can do. It excludes the conclusion which might have been drawn from the naked statement of the conditions of the eighth section.

The tenth section grants, (I do not know by whom,) that the right to "do any and all acts and things which may be needful to insure a speedy completion of the said road," includes the power to resume the land grant by legislative act. I hope this has never been asserted by any respectable lawyer, for I must say that it is absurd. I am not afraid that any gentleman in this committee will believe it.

The power to deprive a man of his property without process of law, is a very different thing from the power to hurry him up in his work. This privilege has been granted to the railroad company in case it do not go fast enough, was put in on purpose to negative the right of resumption, and furnish another—a specific and exclusive—remedy for the public injury which might be caused by delay or negligence. Besides, the resumption of the land grant is very far from being beneficial to the interest of the public work. It is just exactly the contrary. Here is a company moving rapidly along toward the completion of the greatest railroad in the world, and you propose to disable it utterly by taking away its means of doing it. Do you think that hurrying the speedy completion of the work? You might as well cut the hamstrings of a race-horse to insure his fleetness.

There is another clause, in section twenty, which gives Congress the right to add to, alter, amend, or repeal the act of incorporation, if necessary to accomplish the object of the act, namely, the construction of the road; but this must be done with due regard to the rights of the company. I am not aware that this has ever been suggested as a ground upon which the power to divest the estate of the stockholders in their lands could be based. But it is impossible to tell what may not be said or thought in such a case as this. Therefore, I may be pardoned for saying that depriving the company of the lands in which it has a vested title is not having a due regard for its rights. I may also remind you of the well-settled principle that a power reserved in a charter to alter, amend, or repeal it at the pleasure of the Legislature can never be used to abrogate a contract under which rights have become vested. In other words, you cannot create a corporation, give it lands for a consideration, and, after receiving the consideration, in whole or in part, take back the lands under pretense that you are merely modifying the charter.

There is absolutely no pretense for depriving these stockholders of their right under the land grant. If you do it at all, it will not be the exercise of your constitutional authority, but an act of arbitrary and lawless confiscation. I hold that their property, if acquired lawfully, is as sacred as your life or mine; and I oppose confiscation and every species of robbery, for the same reason that I oppose killing men or kidnapping them without warrant or trial.

I cannot be mistaken in my belief that these stockholders fairly, honestly, and legally got their interest in these lands at a cost far greater than

THURSDAY, April 22—P. M.

Speculation on the Stock Exchange was weak in the early dealings, and a fractional decline in prices was recorded, in which almost the entire list participated. Later, under the leadership of Pacific Mail, the market became stronger, and a general advance took place. The purchasing movement in Pacific Mail was characterized by great confidence, and was accompanied by rumors that the pool engaged in manipulating the stock are determined to put it up to much higher figures. The speculation in the general list was without but any prominent feature during the greater part of the afternoon, but toward the close a vigorous selling movement was developed, under which prices rapidly fell off, the decline, however, being confined within comparatively narrow limits. The bear attack was generally attributed to a prominent operator, who is believed to be heavily short of certain lines of stocks, particularly the coal shares. In the final dealings the market assumed a firmer tone, and in the majority of instances the closing quotations showed some improvement from the lowest recorded.

The transactions aggregated 281,917 shares, including 47,000 Erie, 36,000 Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, 32,000 Ontario and Western, 30,500 Pacific Mail, 18,800 St. Paul, 14,600 Iron Mountain, 12,200 Wabash Pacific, 10,000 Hannibal and St. Joseph, 10,000 Ohio and Mississippi, 9,000 Kansas and Texas, 6,800 New-Jersey Central, 6,700 Western Union, 6,500 Lake Shore, 4,700 North-western, 4,600 Manhattan Elevated, 4,000 Nashville and Chattanooga, 2,900 Canada Southern, 2,900 Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, 2,400 American District Telegraph, 2,000 Delaware and Hudson, 1,400 New-York Central, and 1,300 Union Pacific.

The monetary situation continues to be characterized by easy and borrowers on call on pledge of stock collateral find ready accommodation at low rates of interest. Loans were effected to-day at rates ranging from 4 to 6 ⅌ cent., with the bulk of the business at the intermediate quotation. Prime discounts were quoted at 5@6 ⅌ cent. The following are the rates of domestic exchange on New-York at the undermentioned cities to-day: Savannah, buying 5-16, selling 5-16 premium; Charleston, buying 5-32, selling ⅛ premium; New-Orleans, commercial par, bank 250 premium; St. Louis, 75 premium; Chicago, 60 premium, and Boston, ⅛ discount.

The foreign advices reported British Consols at London steady and unchanged. United States Government bonds were generally firm as 106¾ for new 4s, 111¼ for 4½s, and 104⅝ for 4s. The statement of the Bank of England for the past week shows a decrease in specie of £25,000, and the proportion of the bank's reserve to liabilities is 38 5-16 ⅌ cent., which is the same as last week; the rate of discount at the bank of England remains fixed at 3 ⅌ cent. At Paris the rates ranged from 3f. 47½c. to 3f. 37½c., but recovered to 3f. 40c. Exchange on London is quoted at 25f. 20c. The Bank of France gained 19,000,000f. in bullion during the past fiscal week.

MEN AND WORK AT ALBANY

A BILL FOR SOMEBODY'S PECUNIARY GOOD.

WHAT EX-POLICE COMMISSIONER DISBECKER IS LOOKING AFTER—A GOOD BILL VITIATED BY A CURIOUS AMENDMENT—REMOVED POLICE COMMISSIONERS' SALARIES.

ALBANY, April 22.—One of the men seen frequently about the Assembly and Senate is ex-Police Commissioner Disbecker. He has been reported as coming here as a "helper" in the work for the charter amendments, and then again he is spoken of as one of the influences against that remarkable piece of Pattersonian legislation. It is surmised that Mr. Disbecker is not here out of pure patriotism, but that hope of material reward will keep him here until Assembly bill No. 684, now in the Subcommittee of the Whole, shall have been amended to suit him, then passed by both houses, and signed by Gov. Cornell.

This bill was introduced in March, and as it first appeared and was considered, it was reported as a good bill. It provided that the Board of Estimate and Apportionment should audit and allow the counsel fee and expenses of any Police Commissioner who should be a successful party in an action for removal brought by the Mayor. This was understood to apply to the litigation of Police Commissioner Nichols, and the bill was designed to compensate the counsel merely. The bill was introduced by Mr. Dougherty, who succeeded in having it placed on the list of bills referred to the Subcommittee of the Whole. Wednesday afternoon, in the sub-committee, Thomas C. E. Ecclesine, who is said to be looking after the bill for Commissioner Nichols, and Abraham Disbecker, who is supposed to be looking after the bill for Abraham Disbecker, were present, when Mr. Dougherty moved the bill, and offered an amazing amendment, which substantially proposed to swap an execrable bill for a doubtfully good one. The substitute changed the first section so that the Controller takes the place of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, and proposes to extend the liberty to audit to every proceeding by a Police Commissioner to recover legal expenses incurred in a case against the Mayor who attempts to remove him. Not satisfied with this, it goes on to say that the second section shall be as follows:

SECTION 2. Any Police Commissioner of said city who has been prevented from performing the duties of his office by the Mayor of said city removing him therefrom, without affording him an opportunity to be heard, as directed and required by the provisions of section 15 of chapter 335 of the Laws of 1873, may present to said Controller a statement of the facts relating to such removal, duly verified, and it shall be the duty of said Controller to make inquiry in reference thereto, and if he is satisfied as to the truth thereof, and that such removal was made, he shall certify as a charge against said City in favor of said Commissioner, the amount of salary of the office to which such Commissioner was appointed, at the rate provided by law, from the date of removal until a successor was duly appointed to fill a new term, or until such Commissioner was restored to complete his term, with interest on each monthly payment.

This curious amendment, which no one could exactly understand, but which clearly meant to do something that the original bill did not contemplate doing, was ordered to be sent to a sub-committee of the Grinding Committee, and Mr. Titus, the Chairman, named Mr. Duell, Mr. Carpenter, of Suffolk, and Mr. Dougherty as the sub-committee to study the puzzle. If they discover that there is "anything in it," they will, of course, make it their business to let everybody know what it is. An absurd story is going about that Disbecker has declared that Senator Woodin will not let the bill pass the Senate unless the amendments are allowed to be made. Disbecker may enjoy the reputation of "influencing" Senator Woodin, but no one believes that Senator Woodin will enjoy the reputation of being influenced by Disbecker to the extent of making him father to questionable bills.

WORK OF THE LEGISLATURE.

A LARGE AMOUNT OF IMPORTANT BUSINESS IN BOTH BRANCHES.

ALBANY, April 22.—In the Assembly this morning a resolution was adopted recommending the dismissal of John D. Christie, who has been a general messenger since the House was organized, and had been assigned as Superintendent of the Wrapping Department. He became greedy for "tips," and finally presumed so far as to refuse to do work for members unless he was paid roundly. A committee of investigation was ordered, and its report, recommending his dismissal, finds that he had been charging from 50 cents to $5 for all jobs undertaken, although he was receiving $3 a day from the State for just the services for which he was demanding this money. The resolution of dismissal was adopted unanimously.

The biennial sessions resolution was considered as a special order this morning in the Assembly. Mr. Skinner again presented the arguments offered by him last year, to show that the resolution should be incorporated in the Constitution. The experiment of biennial sessions had been found to work well in many of the States, so that it was not a hazardous one for New-York. Mr. Bridges advocated its adoption, and so did Mr. Alvord, who believed that it would be both economical and wise for the Legislature to meet only once in two years, instead of every year. Mr. D. G. Bradley and Mr. Wren opposed the proposition.

The bill providing for the taxation of deposits in savings banks was made a special order for Tuesday morning next. The bill to punish malicious annoyance, intended to reach just such persons as Williamson, the persecutor of the Rev. Dr. Dix, was passed by a vote of 83, without opposition. Mr. Varnum this morning submitted a favorable report of the Cities Committee on the Public Burdens bills, with a motion that they be recommitted to the committee, with power to report "complete" at any time. This gives the committee the chance to put them upon their third reading at any day it chooses to report them back to the House. Mr. Varnum's City Committee street-cleaning report was submitted this morning.

After recess, the Assembly continued to discuss the canal resolution of Mr. Hurd, and then took up the Niagara Park bill, introduced by Mr. Low, and intended to carry out the plans of the Niagara Falls Commission. The bill met with slight opposition. In the House, the biennial sessions and canal resolutions and the Niagara Park bills were ordered to a third reading. It is possible that the Niagara Falls bill may have to be amended in order to get 86 votes, there being some opposition among the Democrats to naming ex-Lieut.-Gov. Dorsheimer as one of the Commissioners.

Mr. Bergh's bill to prevent vivisection, introduced early in the session, was reported adversely from the Senate Judiciary Committee this morning, and the report was agreed to without any opposition. The Senate spent most of the session in the third reading of bills. Among those passed was Throop's nine chapters of supplement to the Code of Procedure. Senator Fowler tried hard to have that portion relating to Surrogates' Courts stricken out, but he only got two votes in favor of it. Judge Robertson said this portion embraced nearly one-fourth of the bill, and it, as well as the remainder of the nine chapters, had undergone the closest examination and scrutiny of four different Judiciary Committees of the Senate, of leading members of the Bar, and of Bar Associations throughout the State; of a majority of the Judges of the Supreme Court and Surrogates, all of whom urge the passage of the bill.

The bill to rebuild the Gansevoort Market being on its third reading, Mr. Hogan moved to recommit it to the Cities Committee. Mr. Strahan said the motion was made purely for delay, and in the hope of killing the bill. He said the bill was approved by the Mayor, Controller, Dock Commissioners, and, in fact, all the City officers of New-York. Mr. Hogan denied that his motion was made for delay. He wished to have it considered in connection with the proposition, now attracting attention in New-York, of rebuilding Washington Market, without cost to the City for additional ground, by doing away with West Washington Market, and thus affording all the space for market-wagons that was required. The motion to recommit was defeated and the bill passed.

The bill to permit foreign fire insurance companies to do business in New-York when having a paid up capital of $600,000, came up for final passage when Mr. Forster moved to recommit that clause for insertion making an exception in favor of marine companies as well as fire insurance companies, and prohibiting the foreign companies from doing business outside of New-York City and Brooklyn, and confining their business in those cities to insurance on goods in stores. Mr. Schroeder opposed the amendments, and said that so far as marine insurance companies were concerned, nobody asked for any change in the law, simply because we had marine insurance companies enough to take all the risks applied for. But in reference to fire companies it was different; the American companies were unable to do the business; less than a month ago the Harmony Mills of Cohoes, was obliged to go to Europe for insurance on its property, because American companies had all the risks they could take, and such cases were of daily occurrence. The proposition to confine business to New-York and Brooklyn, and to goods in stores, was without reason or sense. Mr. Forster's motion was lost by a large majority. Mr. Hogan then moved an amendment, which was adopted, permitting suits against foreign companies to be brought in State courts. With this amendment the bill passed.

Mr. Woodin introduced a bill, which was passed under a suspension of the rules, requiring the Superintendent of State Prisons to transfer prisoners from any prison where two prisoners are confined in the same cell to such prison as has vacant cells. He said that Auburn had 400 vacant cells, while at Sing Sing a very large number of the prisoners were quartered two in a cell. The Inspector of State Prisons, he said, had the authority as the law now stood to make these transfers, but he neglected to do it, and the object of this bill was to make it compulsory.

The Senate went into executive session and received the nomination of two Quarantine Commissioners, several Loan Commissioners, and a large number of notaries, all of which, except the notaries, were referred to standing committees under the rule. The nominations for Quarantine Commissioners are David W. Judd, of Richmond County, who is reappointed, and John N. Nichols, of Brooklyn, who takes the place of James M. Oakley, of Queens County. Mr. Judd is well known in New-York as a member of the agricultural firm of Orange, Judd & Co. This is his third appointment as Quarantine Commissioner, he having been originally appointed by Gen. Dix in 1873 and subsequently by Gov. Robinson in 1877. He is well known as a journalist, and was a member of the Legislature from Richmond County in 1872, when he made an excellent record. His official record as Quarantine Commissioner has never been assailed, and has met the approbation of two Democratic, as well as two Republican, Governors. Mr. John N. Nichols, the nominee for Mr. Oakley's place, has also been a journalist, well known in the West, but for several years has held the position of President of the Knickerbocker Life Insurance Company, an institution which, before he became connected with it, was subjected to criticism in its management, but which Mr. Nichols has succeeded in placing upon a reputable footing. The nominations are regarded here as among the best that the Governor has made, and they will, doubtless, be confirmed without opposition.

The Committee on Commerce and Navigation reported favorably on two Harbor-masters and three Port-wardens, who were sent in last week, and they were confirmed. The Harbor-masters are Michael W. Burns, appointed in place of Capt. Tinker, and Ferdinand E. Cody in place of John McGroarty. The Port-wardens are John S. Kidder in place of T. F. C. Petersch; William G. Waite in place of John Sherry, and William G. Welch in place of George P. Burdett. There was some discussion in executive session over the confirmation of these appointments. Senator Madden wanted to know whether they knew anything about the duties of a Harbor-master or a Port-warden. He knew nothing about the men, and would like some one to vouch for their fitness for the offices to which they had been appointed. A majority of the Senators appeared to think that they were about as well fitted for the posts as appointees to those offices generally are, and, without being able to give any vouchers to Mr. Madden, they deemed it best to vote for confirmation. Mr. Jacobs made an unsuccessful appeal to save his friend John McGroarty, who, he said, had performed his duties with such satisfaction that all the merchants who knew him had petitioned for his retention in office. He could not gainsay the fact, however, that McGroarty was a Democrat, and was obliged to accept the Democratic doctrine that "to the victors belong the spoils."

At the evening session the Senate discussed the Tax bill that was progressed last week, providing what kind of property shall be exempt from taxation. Mr. Woodin moved to strike out that portion of section 3 which provides for taxing property invested in other States by residents of this State. The motion was lost. On motion of Mr. Mills, the section was so amended as to exempt moneys sent to this State for investment or otherwise by residents of other States. The bill was then ordered to a third reading, and the Senate adjourned.

THE MISSING BOOKS NOT YET FOUND—SECONDARY EVIDENCE TO BE RECEIVED.

Mr. J. Wilton Brooks's lawyers have not yet found the books of the Evening Express Company. The hearing of the suit of Mr. Brooks to set aside the late election of Trustees, on the ground of fraudulent proceedings by John Kelly and his friends, was continued yesterday before Rufus F. Andrews, the Referee. Messrs. Joseph J. O'Donohue and Edward Kearney, respondents in the case, attended as witnesses. Both were asked if they had any books of the Express Company in their custody, or if they were aware of the whereabouts of the records. The answers were in the negative. Mr. Strahan, of counsel for the respondents, submitted to the Referee a personal letter received from Mr. Augustus Schell to the effect that his wife was still too ill to leave South Carolina. Mr. Thomas B. Kingsland, publisher of the Express, testified that at the annual meetings of the stockholders in 1878, 1879, and 1880, called for the purpose of electing Trustees, he had acted as Secretary. A book exhibited by Mr. Winsor was identified by Mr. Kingsland as containing a record of the minutes of the meetings of 1878 and 1879; some loose pages in the book were recognized by him, as containing the minutes of the last meeting. Despite objections of counsel for the respondents, the books and papers were received in evidence, as were also the certificates of election, excepting that of 1879. Mr. Strahan objected to the introduction of the certificate for that year on the ground that it did not bear the signatures of the Inspectors of Election. It was temporarily withdrawn by Mr. Winsor, who then moved for permission to introduce secondary evidence. His associate, Mr. Marsh, contended that every effort to bring Mr. Augustus Schell before the Referee had failed, notwithstanding the numerous statements that he would soon put in an appearance. Ex-Judge Cardozo said that the three gentlemen who had been enjoined from acting as Trustees had no control over the books, and could not be reasonably expected to produce them. After considerable argument on both sides, the Referee decided that as the books had been removed from their proper place to the custody of Mr. Schell, who was now beyond the jurisdiction of the court, it would be proper to receive secondary evidence. An adjournment until noon to-day was then agreed to.

THE NINTH REGIMENT PARADE.

The Ninth Regiment had an out-door parade last night. The members assembled in fatigue uniform, light marching order, at their armory, No. 221 West 26th-st., at 8 o'clock, and half an hour later line was formed in the street, with 10 companies of 18 files front. Owing to the recent death of Col. Ryder's father, the regiment was commanded by Lieut.-Col. Montgomery, and Major Wetmore assumed the place of the Lieutenant-Colonel in line. The men kept step to a fife and drum corps of 27 pieces, and the route followed was through Twenty-sixth-street to Fifth-avenue, to Twenty-eighth-street, to Thirty-fourth-street, to Fifth-avenue, and down to Waverley-place; thence to Broadway, to Fifth-avenue, to Twenty-eighth-street; thence to Seventh-avenue and Twenty-sixth-street, returning through the latter thoroughfare to the armory, which was reached at 10 o'clock. The regiment marched in column of fours through the narrow streets, but in Thirty-fourth-street and the avenues the march was in company front, which filled the street from curb to curb. The old battle flags of the Ninth floated from the residences of Major Wetmore, in Waverley-place, and were saluted by the officers. The parade was a preliminary feature of the regimental field day at Staten Island next Tuesday. No battalion movements, aside from marching, were executed on the street, however, as both the Colonel and Lieutenant-Colonel are opposed to street-drills.

XVIIIth DISTRICT REPUBLICANS.

The Seventeenth Assembly District Republican Association met last evening and received a report from its Executive Committee to the effect that the amendment to the constitution, authorizing associations having 500 or more members to open the polls at primary elections at 3 P. M. instead of 7 P. M., had been concurred in by a majority of the district organizations. The amendment was thereupon adopted, and the by-laws were changed so as to provide for the exclusion of all persons excepting members, policemen, and members of the press from the rooms of the association during the progress of primary elections. A brief note was received from Senator Conkling, thanking the members of the association for their congratulations on his election, and promising to see to it that the matter receives attention.

THE COURT'S DIGNITY HURT

ANOTHER AMUSING SCENE IN THE WHITTAKER CASE.

MR. TOWNSEND, TRYING TO GET AT FACTS, UNWITTINGLY TREADS ON MILITARY TOES—STRIKING BACK—EXTRAORDINARY TESTIMONY OF THE POST BOOTBLACK AND DENTIST.

WEST POINT, April 22.—The dignity of the military court sitting here—composed of one Major, a Captain, and a Lieutenant—has again been infringed by the luckless Mr. Townsend, the envoy of the President and Secretary of War to see that justice is done Whittaker. The court, it may be said, dignity Mr. Townsend by the title of "assistant counsel," and among officers here it is asserted that he is only tolerated in the court in deference to public opinion, and that legally he has no right to be there at all. During Mr. Townsend's stay, he says he has been liberally lectured by the military authorities as to the sort of questions he should ask witnesses. The authorities insist that he has no right to ask questions showing Whittaker's ostracism or ill-treatment by white Cadets. Mr. Townsend thinks such questions are pertinent to the case, and that he has a right to ask them, but, in deference to the opinions of his judges, he has heretofore foreborne in great part to do so. To-day he ventured to deviate from this rule, and the result was another scene, in which the military element, it is to be feared, has laid itself open to adverse criticism.

The trouble arose in this wise. The Recorder had called two remarkable witnesses—one the Post Dentist, and the other the negro bootblack—to impeach the testimony of Louis Simpson. The dentist swore that he pumped the bootblack in regard to his knowledge of the outrage, and that the bootblack, whom he admitted was half drunk at the time, had confided to him (the dentist) that it was a very mysterious affair altogether; that a great deal of money had been made in the job, and that John Sherman or Gen. Sherman was at the bottom of it. Then the bootblack was called, and, after making some damaging insinuations against Whittaker, said that he had told the dentist something about a sum of money, and still thought the outrage had been put up for political purposes. This precious testimony, which would have been flung out of any ordinary court with contempt, was listened to by Mr. Townsend with marked impatience.

When the witness got through with his rigmarole, the venerable Congressman said pointedly: "Where do you get your living?"

The witness said he was employed by the officers of the Post to black their boots.

"And you are liable to be discharged at any moment?"

"Yes, Sir."

"I should judge so by your testimony," said Mr. Townsend, dryly.

This saying infuriated some of the officers sitting about, and had a marked effect upon the court and the Recorder. Later on the witness admitted that he thought injustice had been done to Whittaker by Cadet McDonald, the boy who beat him, but that Whittaker was to blame for not fighting back. The following dialogue ensued. It is reported verbatim:

Mr. Townsend—Do you understand that it is a rule of the authorities here that when a man is struck he must fight?

Witness—Well, I understand this much from what I have learned from seeing what the Cadets do here—

Mr. Townsend—I am talking about the rules. Do you understand the rule requires a man to fight when he is struck?

Witness—The rule don't require him to fight.

Mr. Townsend—It prohibits him, doesn't it?

Witness—It prohibits him, I think. Am sure of it.

Mr. Townsend—Except in the case of the colored Cadet, perhaps?

The President (Mordecai.)—Does the assistant counsel desire these remarks to go upon the record?

Mr. Townsend—No, Sir; sometimes I can't quite avoid it—

The President—These remarks reflect upon the officers of the Academy.

Mr. Townsend—I am not reflecting upon anybody; I am only reflecting upon the pretense that—

The President—The remarks, then, of the assistant counsel that reflect upon the officers of the Academy, will be struck from the record.

Mr. Townsend—I hope they don't go there; I am very careful; I don't want to get into trouble, and if I do I hope I shan't be called a coward. I want you to understand that I am not afraid to strike back.

Here Gen. Schofield advanced and said to Mr. Townsend: "I think you are very much mistaken if you don't think we teach, or ought to teach, a boy to resent a blow when he receives it here. I desire that to go upon the record, and be judged in Washington. They might teach that in the Bible, but not here."

Lieut. Knight, his face suffused with indignation, said to Mr. Townsend: "I don't think there's anything to justify your sitting here and insulting us officers. Pardon me for saying this to your gray hairs, but I must protest against it to any one. I consider your remarks very insulting."

The court meantime had retired for consultation, and after a few minutes, Major Mordecai read the decision, as follows:

"The court will say that on account of the last remark made by the assistant counsel before we left the room, and the remarks made during the examination of this last witness be retained upon the record."

Mr. Townsend's treatment by the court is the more remarkable, inasmuch as he hitherto has observed a most conciliatory attitude toward both the court and military authorities. He has refrained from asking a great many questions that seemed most pertinent, and that certainly would have been asked in an ordinary court of justice. It is now thought that the Government counsel will hereafter pursue a more decided policy, and probe this mystery to the bottom, no matter whose feelings are hurt.

Other features of the day were the examination of Mrs. Ryan, the wife of "Phil" Ryan, who evinced no great eagerness to testify, and of Miss Ryan. Both mother and daughter contradicted point-blank the testimony of Ryan himself regarding the presence of Cadets in his place. Under the skillful cross-questioning of Mr. Townsend, the daughter admitted that two young men from the Ordinance Department (Major Mordecai's) had been down at their house the day after the outrage. The Recorder tried to destroy the force of the testimony, but failed signally.

Louis Sampson, who, according to the cock-and-bull story retailed here by Whittaker's accusers, was an accomplice in the outrage, as Whittaker's confederate, denied in the most positive manner all knowledge of the affair other than has been already made public. He was asked a number of extraordinary questions as to where he got his clothes, how much he paid for them, &c., in a tone and manner that were justly regarded insulting. Major Mordecai wanted to know whether he had always lived with his wife. Louis was the body-servant of Gen. Sedgwick, of the old Sixth Army Corps, during the war; was employed 11½ years in the Treasury, at Washington; his family are all well-to-do, and never had his character called in question before. The day closed with the remarkable evidence of the post dentist and boot-black referred to above.

Cadet Townsley was the first witness this morning. He corroborated his testimony saying that Kemble, a young student at Highland Falls, had told him there were certain Cadets down at the Falls at a ball late the night before the outrage. Kemble saw them, but didn't know positively that they were Cadets, as they wore citizen's clothes. Kemble heard the reports several days afterward, and told them to witness and his room-mate.

"What were the exact words he used?" asked Mr. Townsend.

"He spoke of two men—one with a mustache and one in citizen's clothes."

Cadet Krebs swore that he was out between 5:15 and 5:45. His room-mate, Cadet Montague, was in the hospital.

Anne Ryan, the wife of "Phil" Ryan, was called next. She was veiled, and spoke in an eager, tremulous voice.

"Were there any persons at your place," began the Recorder.

"No, Sir," interjected the witness, nervously.

"One moment. Were there any Cadets in your place that night from 9:30 o'clock till 6 the next morning?"

"No—no, no one, no soldiers, nobody," replied the witness, eagerly. "We closed early, as we always do. There was no one there from 7 to 9:30 that night either."

"Did you have no business that night?"

"No business, no one, no soldiers, nobody. Cadets come there sometimes. I don't remember when the last came. There were some there in uniform; it was well known they were Cadets; my husband knew them. He visited them. I don't know if Cadets or persons supposed to be Cadets were the Sunday night previous. We never have Cadets there after 9 o'clock. I never cooked any meals for them, nor did my husband or daughter—never. I was not in the saloon all the evening; but passed in and out."

Mr. Townsend skillfully drew from the witness an admission that she was across the way a portion of the evening. He pressed her for an exact statement of the time, and she said about three-quarters of an hour between 8 and 9 o'clock. She said that she knew no Cadets were there, because she asked her husband when she came.

"My good woman, tell us what you know yourself; we haven't so much confidence in your husband as you have."

The witness added that Riker, a bandman, and Dr. Munroe were the last persons in her husband's place that day. They were in about 5 o'clock in the afternoon. Witness heard the report about the three Cadets the next morning. She did not say who told it to her. Mrs. Sampson was in her place the next morning, and made a fuss. Mrs. Sampson said that somebody had done this thing to Whittaker, and that God Almighty was moving heaven and earth to set the colored vote. (Laughter.) Witness told her husband to do what he pleased about testifying. She told him to tell the truth.

"Did he tell you tell the truth?" asked Mr. Townsend.

"He didn't talk with me," replied the witness evasively.

Miss Emma Ryan, daughter of Philip Ryan, a tall, rather good-looking lady, testified that she was at home the whole of the night previous to the outrage from nightfall to daylight. The house generally closed at 9:30 o'clock. She had gone to bed at 10 o'clock, when Cadets were still there. She had heard the reports about three Cadets being down there the night before the outrage; every one who spoke of it had been told by some one else. She didn't remember when the Cadets were down there last. There were some at Thanksgiving, Christmas, Lee's birthday, and Mr. Burnett were among them; she thought her father knew this; her father knew the Cadets' names, and Mrs. Simpson, in her visit the day after the affair, spoke of the outrage committed on Whittaker, and said that John Sherman was moving heaven and earth to get the proposed vote.

"It was John Sherman this time?" asked the Recorder, amid laughter.

"Yes, Sir."

Mr. Townsend took the witness in hand, and drew from her the admission that two strange gentlemen had been down there the afternoon after the outrage. For a long time the witness said she did not know who they were, but finally admitted that her father had said they were "from the Ordnance Department." The admission of this fact, which was published in Tuesday's issue five days ago, made a decided sensation. Major Mordecai, who is Chief of the Ordnance Department, whispered with the Recorder, and the latter asked the witness instructingly:

"Now, Miss Ryan, might it not have been ordnance detachment—some soldier from the ordnance detachment instead of department?"

"No Sir, it was Ordnance Department," said the girl thoughtfully, after a pause. The Recorder tried to draw out of her that it was more likely that soldiers from the Ordnance Department instead of young men from Major Mordecai's department, but didn't succeed very well. She didn't know of commissioned officers being down there.

Cadet Montague "believed" that Cadet Cragin was in his room all night, but didn't know. Mrs. Brannigan, daughter of Andrew Brannigan, a cavalryman at the Point, swore that she had been told the story about the three Cadets being down at Highland Falls the night before the outrage. She had been told it by Monaghan, a cavalryman, who said he got it from Haight, the milkman.

A Cadet witness swore that he had asked the hospital attendant as to the extent of Whittaker's injuries on the morning of the outrage. Another Cadet witness did not know positively whether he was in his room or not all night.

The afternoon Louis Simpson, the alleged "accomplice," was called. The Recorder had kept in attendance for several days, was called. The Recorder asked him a remarkable series of questions, going into the whole of his life and past history in the minutest manner, and in a way calculated to convey the impression that there was something in the witness's record that would not bear scrutiny. Simpson answered that he had lived in Washington City for 15 years past, with the exception of the past 18 months. From 1862 to 1865 he was Gen. Sedgwick's body servant in the Army of the Potomac, and for 11½ years had been employed in the Treasury Department. He had been 14 months out of employment. In 1878, he was absent 16 days in Newport, R. I. From June, 1878, to April, 1880, he was working with his father in the bath-room, and helping around generally, blacking shoes for cadets, &c. He was getting $10 a month and his board. He went to Washington on the Thursday following the outrage; he had been offered work there by Mrs. Gen. Brooks. He stopped in New-York at 9:30 o'clock in the morning and staid till 10 o'clock at night. The Recorder made him tell every one he saw in New-York, who they were, what he said to them and they to him. Witness got his place in Washington April 13. His attention was first called to suspicions against him by articles in Washington papers, and he immediately reported himself at the office of the Secretary of War; he was hounded by detectives, and was brought on to the Point by detectives.

"How much money did you have when you left?" asked the Recorder.

"Twenty-nine dollars and some cents," replied the witness. He said he borrowed $15 of Fred Wise in Highland Falls, and got the rest of his father as wages.

"Where did you get that suit of clothes?" demanded the Recorder.

The witness looked indignant. "I bought and paid for them last January."

The Recorder made him tell where he got them, whose store, the first name of the storekeeper, &c. He paid $14 for them at McIntrow's store, in New-York. His departure from the Point was not at all hastened by the outrage. He left the Point at 7:30 A. M.; had $17 in his pocket when he got to Washington. Didn't know what particular business Mrs. Brooks was going to employ him at. She "was to give him $3 a day. Had known Whittaker 18 months; formed his acquaintance in bath-room and Whittaker made the first overtures; witness saw him on an average twice a week for 10 or 15 minutes, perhaps for 30 minutes; saw him last previous to attack on Sunday evening; Whittaker remained with him 20 minutes and showed him the enormous note which he said he had found on his chair; witness read it over, laughed, and advised the Cadet to say nothing about it; he said people who wished to harm a man didn't usually send such notes beforehand; Mitchell, the boot-black, was there, and one or two others; the only colored population about Highland Falls was his mother's family; he used to give Whittaker the daily papers. After last examination Whittaker seemed to think he was getting on very well; he never spoke to witness about trouble with a Cadet; witness never told Boot-black Mitchell that he had got a place at Washington at $3 a day. The lady he worked for in Washington was a married lady. Witness talked with Mitchell the night after the outrage, and for one or two nights after that; he said he thought the affair was an outrage. Witness stopped with Krimbling, at Highland Falls, the night he got back from Washington; hadn't been to his mother's house in some time; hadn't seen her in two years. First saw Cadet Whittaker on the morning after the accident, as he was going into the hospital. Whittaker said: "They've tried to kill me." Witness said he was glad it wasn't so bad, and told him to cheer up, and that God Almighty would take care of him. [Laughter.]

The witness was questioned closely in regard to several visits that Whittaker had made to him in the boiler-room, on the evenings succeeding the outrage. The door was not locked. Witness admitted saying once that he thought "they would try to send him to the Penitentiary and to get rid of Whittaker." He was provoked by articles in Washington and other papers calling him an accomplice and the leader of a gang of "desperadoes." He had said that he thought the officers were prejudiced against Whittaker, and that the thing might come out differently from what they [the officers] anticipated. He thought Congress and public sentiment would force some action.

The Recorder—Didn't you think the boy would get justice done him here?

Witness (desperately)—No, I did not.

Witness admitted that the Recorder had ordered him not to talk about the case. He had been arrested in Washington by detectives and brought on by a detective, though he had voluntarily gone and notified the War Department that he was there, as soon as he heard the rumors. The witness was questioned rigidly about his talks with Prof. Greener since he came back, and again as to talks with the colored Cadet and Mitchell, the boot-black, in the boiler-house a day or two after the outrage. He might have said to Coffey, the fireman, that the affair would turn out a great help to the boy, and get him through. Coffey was an Irishman, and in the employ of the post.

To Mr. Townsend the witness said that Mitchell and himself were the only colored men about the barracks, and that no one else, officers or Cadets, would speak to Whittaker socially. It was, therefore, natural, that the boy, in his trouble, should come to them for consolation. His authority for saying that the officers were prejudiced was derived "out of his own mind."

Dr. Saunders, the Post dentist, swore that he had questioned the negro boot-black, Mitchell, about the case; it was on the Thursday after. Mitchell had been drinking, and hadn't got over it. The boot-black was in his [the dentist's] office at the time, and talked in a muddled sort of way.

"I asked him," said the dentist, "whether the Cadet had injured himself. He said it was a very mysterious affair; he said if Whittaker had "given in that way he was no better than any Irishman or Dutchman; he said something about making money in the business; my impression is he said that we would all of us do pretty well if we made all the money that was made in this business; I talked with him a great deal, and asked him manifold questions; he thought there was a great deal of money in the thing, and that Gen. Sherman or John Sherman was at the bottom of it."

Mr. Townsend, (sarcastically)—Did he say that Gen. Sherman or John Sherman got any of the money?

Witness—No, Sir.

Mitchell, the boot-black, was next called. He was 30 years of age, tolerably well dressed, and had Burnside whiskers. He unhesitatingly avowed the substance of his conversation with the dentist, although denying that he had spoken of the sum of money as a bribe. He meant the money that had been spent on this institution [the Point], said to free the colored race in the war. He had told Dr. Saunders that "he thought it was a political job, and that, now that Fitz John Porter was dead, they would want something to chaw on." Mrs. Brannigan told him about three Cadets being down to Ryan's and threatening to fix Whittaker. He had heard a man named Powell say in Johnny Maris's saloon in Highland Falls that he could pick out two of the Cadets that did it from the ranks; witness was shown the warning note before the outrage; he told Whittaker that if he took it to head-quarters they would laugh at him; Whittaker had spoken of showing it to the commandant, and said that he got a similar one a year ago; Whittaker, after his wounds were fixed, told witness that "they hadn't hurt him much; it was only a little trick," &c.; witness knew about his clothes being covered with blood, and the getting of the Commandant and Gen. Schofield and all at the boy's room, and the taking him to the hospital, &c., and had supposed that he was half killed.

At the time Whittaker spoke the wounds were on his cheek and he still limped. Witness (who claimed his living out of the officers) had no doubt that justice would be done.

John Turner, Assistant Engineer, was examined, but his testimony amounted to little.

A LOSING ICE SPECULATION.

TROY, N. Y., April 22.—Two speculators, some time ago, stored about 10,000 tons of ice at a point on Cumberland Bay, Lake Champlain, and contracted to deliver it to a New-York company at some profit. Yesterday they found that the lower tier had melted, causing the rest mass to settle, forcing out the ends of the buildings, and permitting the greater portion of the stock to slide into the lake. The ice was valued at $6 a ton.
